Impression of 1930
First edition, 1904
Printed in Great Britain
PREFACE

The present edition of the Utopia of More has been undertaken with a double object; to encourage and assist the study of a work which deserves to take a far more prominent place than it has hitherto held in our curricula of advanced education, and to supply a want which no preceding edition has aimed at supplying. Few works have so many claims to attention. Though not originally written in our own language it is, through the versions of Robynson and Bishop Burnet, one of the most famous works in English literature, and to every student with any pretension to a competent knowledge of that literature an acquaintance with it is indispensable. As a romance and work of art it ranks, if not in vogue at least in celebrity, with the Pilgrim's Progress, with Robinson Crusoe, and with Gulliver's Travels. To the student of moral and political philosophy or of the theory of education it is of equal importance, and it well deserves a place, as a subject of study, beside the Republic and Laws of Plato and the Politics of Aristotle; while the light which it throws on the state of Europe, and more particularly on that of England, at one of the most critical periods in their annals, would alone entitle it to be regarded as a textbook in the study of the social and political history of the sixteenth century.

Of preceding editions two only are known to me which have any claim to consideration, and neither supplies what it is the aim of the present edition to supply. Of Dr. Lupton's edition of the Latin text and of Robynson's translation it is scarcely possible to speak too highly. If Dr. Lupton had designed his work for the class of students to which this edition appeals, for circulation—that is to say, in schools and ordinary educational institutes—the present edition would have been a mere work of supererogation. But his work is addressed to mature scholars; it is not designed to include such information as junior students necessarily require, or to become a popular textbook. My indebtedness to Dr. Lupton I have, I hope, always acknowledged whenever it has been direct, but indirectly it has been more considerable than my frequent acknowledgements of it indicate. I have often been able to add to his illustrations and to explain what he, studying succinctness, has no doubt purposely left unexplained, by resorting to sources of information to which he has himself guided me. And this applies both to the General Introduction and to the Notes.

Of Dr. Lumby's edition it becomes me to say no more than that a comparison with the present will show that he approaches the work from a very different point of view to that from which it is approached here; that his notes almost entirely confine themselves to elucidating the language of Robynson's text, with the addition of a few explanations of the more obvious historical and biographical allusions.

My own endeavour has been, both in the General Introduction and in the Notes, to meet the probable needs of those students who approach the work on its various sides of interest and importance, namely, those junior students who require elementary philological instruction, and those more advanced students who will be concerned chiefly with its relation to philosophy and history. I have thus attempted to expand and supplement Dr. Lupton's more succinct treatment of these subjects, and to supply at the same time that more rudimentary information which did not come within the scope of his work. My fear is that I may have attempted too much, and that the voluminous annotation which this double purpose has rendered necessary may prove to be confusing. But a judicious student, whether pupil or teacher, will easily discriminate between what is needed for his particular purpose and what is not.

The text is practically that of the first edition of Robynson's translation, but I have corrected obvious misprints, and have not hesitated to adopt the text of the second edition where it is undoubtedly an improvement on that of the first. These deviations from the first edition have been recorded in the Notes.

To Dr. Lupton I have already acknowledged my obligations. I have also been indebted, both in the General Introduction and in the Notes, to Sir James Mackintosh's Life of More, to Father Bridgett's Life and Writings of Sir Thomas More, to Durand de Laur's Érasme, to Mr. Frederick Seebohm's Oxford Reformers, to Professor Arber's Bibliography in his reprint of the Utopia, to Dr. F. J. Furnivall's Ballads from Manuscripts (especially to the Introduction), to Mr. Cooper's edition of the Dialogue between Pole and Lupset in the Early English Text Society's Publications, and to other tracts in the same collection. I have also to thank Mr. Cannan for directing my attention to some interesting parallels with the Germania of Tacitus.

For the excellent Glossarial Index I am indebted to Miss Hilda M. R. Murray of the Royal Holloway College.
CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Life of More</td>
<td>vii–xxx</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Origin and Inspiration of the Utopia</td>
<td>xxx–xxxvi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Framework and Models of the Utopia</td>
<td>xxxvi–xli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Plot</td>
<td>xlii–xlvi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Purpose of the Work</td>
<td>xlvi–xlviii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Early Editions and Translations</td>
<td>xlix–lii</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

TEXT OF *UTOPIA | I–144

NOTES TO *UTOPIA | 145–245

APPENDIX | 247–254

GLOSSARIAL INDEX | 255–283
INTRODUCTION

I. LIFE OF MORE

The Utopia is so closely bound up with the personal life and character of More, and with the social and political movements and events immediately preceding and contemporary with its composition, that a sketch of both is a necessary prelude to its study. Thomas More, the second child and eldest son of John More, successively (1503) serjeant of law, (1518) judge in the Court of Common Pleas, and (1520) of the King's Bench; and of Agnes, daughter of Thomas Graunger, was born February 7, 1478, in Milk Street, London. Of the history of his mother we know nothing. His father, 'of gentle but not noble blood,' is described by his son as 'courteous, affable, innocent, gentle, merciful, just and uncorrupted'; he was also a man of much shrewdness and humour, and all these qualities he bequeathed to his son. Young More received his early education at the school attached to St. Anthony's Hospital in Threadneedle Street, then under the rule of Nicholas Holt, a very competent scholar. But he was removed from school, to be transferred to the household of Cardinal Morton, Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Chancellor, before Holt could have done much more for him than to ground him in Latin. When he entered Morton's household he was little more than a child. But while there, he probably received impressions from the conversation of that eminent statesman and ecclesiastic, which were among the moulding influences of his life. What he thought of Morton, and what perhaps by implication he owed to him, he has himself described in the words which he places in the mouth of Hythlodaye, in the first book of the Utopia. What Morton thought of him is recorded by Roper; 'This child,' he said more than once, 'whoever shall live to see it, will prove a marvellous man.' Perhaps even in these early days he may have heard much from Morton, which many years later he wove into the history of Richard III, and which gave it its colour.

At Morton's recommendation he proceeded to Oxford, probably in 1492, when he was in his fifteenth year. We know comparatively little about his residence there, and that little is uncertain. One tradition places him at Canterbury Hall, a foundation the site of which is now occupied by the Canterbury Quadrangle of Christ Church; another at St. Mary's Hall, another in lodgings at both places. In any case he remained at Oxford 'not fully two years.' He pursued his studies with diligence and enthusiasm, 'wonderfully profiting' says Harpsfield, 'in the Latin and Greek tongues.'

His residence at Oxford was the initiation of his intellectual life, and brought him into contact with that movement which was to transform the England of Mediaevalism into the England of the Renaissance and of the Reformation. Of all the agencies by which that transformation was accomplished the most potent was the New Learning, the revival of the study of Greek, and the substitution of an intelligent study of the great, for an unintelligent study of the inferior Latin Classics. Since the fall of Constantinople in 1453, the ardour for the New Learning in Italy had kindled into fanaticism, Scholars were burning lamps before the bust of Plato, and refusing to study the New Testament lest it should spoil their Greek. Devout and sober Christians were labouring to reconcile Platonism with the teachings of St. John and of St. Paul. The Platonic Academy had been established. The press of Aldus was beginning to pour out the volumes which brought the new treasures within the reach of all. Soon the enthusiasm spread to England. Before 1488, William Grocyn had placed himself under the tuition of Demetrius Chalcondylas at Florence, and had, some two years later, returned to Oxford to lecture on Greek. Thomas Linacre had followed his example, and it was Linacre who was More's Oxford tutor in Greek. Two others who were before long to be numbered among More's most intimate and influential friends—John Colet and William Lilly—also visited Italy for the same purpose and with the same object, to acquire that they might impart.

More left Oxford perfected in Latin and a zealous student of Greek. His practical father, who designed him for the Law, did not, it seems, approve of these studies, and withdrew him prematurely from the University to enter him as a student at New Inn. From New Inn he was removed to Lincoln's Inn, where he was admitted on February 12, 1496; and here he continued with a very small allowance from his stern old father till his call to the Bar in 1500. That father was not a man to be trifled with, and the most dutiful of sons was little likely to provoke him. But though More pursued his legal studies with industry, and no doubt subordinated them to the pursuits to which his tastes led him, those pursuits were by no means neglected.

Two years after his entry into Lincoln's Inn, he made the acquaintance of a man in whom he must have recognized almost a second self; the same mingled playfulness and earnestness, the same enthusiasm for letters, the same delicate humour, the same shrewd insight into life and men. This was Erasmus. Erasmus was then about thirty years of age, and though as yet he had produced nothing of importance he had been the author of many brilliant trifles both in verse and prose, and was no doubt meditating his Adagia. Erasmus was in raptures with his young friend. 'Did nature ever frame a character more gentle, more endearing and happy than Thomas More?' ("Thomae Mori ingenio quid unquam finxit natura vel mollius vel dulcius vel felicius?") he wrote to his friend Robert Fisher. From the day of this meeting the two men were as brothers; and in the history of literary friendships there is nothing more interesting and more touching than the correspondence which, extending to the close of their arduous and troubled lives, records their mutual affection, sympathy and respect.

In 1501, just after his call to the Bar, More was appointed Reader at Furnival's Inn, and while holding this post, he delivered a course of lectures in the Church of St. Laurence, Old Jewry, of which his friend Grocyn was rector, on St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei. They were attended, Roper tells us, not only by Grocyn himself but 'by all the chief learned in the city of London.'
In the spring of 1504, when in his twenty-sixth year, More was returned to Parliament, but for what borough cannot now be ascertained. Shortly after taking his seat he made himself conspicuous by the courage with which he resisted the iniquitous rapacity of Henry VII.

The story which Roper tells, and which has till lately been accepted without question, cannot, as Bishop Stubbs has shown, be reconciled with facts. But whatever difficulty there may be about the precise details, it is quite clear that More imperilled his prospects and even his personal liberty by opposing an unconstitutional and exorbitant demand on the part of the king's ministers. 'God was with you,' said Dudley some years afterwards when More visited him in prison, 'that you confessed no fault against the king; had you done so you would have paid the penalty with your head.' As it was, More had to retire from public life, and the King characteristically revenged himself by seeking a pretext to fine John More £100, and by keeping him in the Tower till it was paid.

This was a critical period in More's life. For some time he buried himself in his lodgings near the Charterhouse and seriously thought of joining the Carthusian brotherhood. His life had always been plain and simple, it now became austerely ascetic. He daily passed long hours in prayer. His body he mortified by fasting and by wearing next his skin a shirt of the sharpest and roughest hair; the naked boards of his chamber were his bed, a log of wood his pillow. Everything indeed seemed to indicate that he had done with the world and with worldly ambition. But More fortunately had wise friends, and healthy instincts. His old tutor Linacre had left Oxford and had settled in London; Grocyn lived within a stone's throw of him, and Colet had recently come into residence as Dean of St. Paul's. They soon recalled him to old studies and to larger and saner conceptions of religion and duty than the ideals of the cloister. Nor was he affected only by living friends. Among the moulding influences of More's early life a very prominent place must be given to a writer whose works were at that time seldom out of his hands. This was Pico della Mirandola, in whom met morally and in some degree intellectually all that was most characteristic of Savonarola, and all that was most characteristic of Colet, in other words what was most characteristic of the Renaissance on its best side and of the Reformation on its sanest and most sober side. More, as a man, was essentially sympathetic and receptive, and though later he was to receive impressions from the most varied studies, it would not be too much to say that at this period of his life he was more powerfully affected by the personal influence of Colet and by the fascination exercised on him by the character and writings of Pico than by anything else. 'You are,' he said to Colet, 'the director of my life.' And that Pico might be to others what he had been to him he translated about this time Gherascho's Life of him, together with four of his Epistles, his Commentary on the sixteenth Psalm and some minor pieces in prose and verse, which were published in 1510.

It was by Colet's advice that he took the step which finally severed him from a monastic life. In 1505 he married Jane the eldest daughter of John Colt, a country gentleman of New Hall in Essex. There is a tradition that he preferred her younger sister, but thinking that such a choice would seem a slight on the elder, very considerately and, it may be added, characteristically, made Jane his bride. He had probably no reason to regret his choice. He appears to have been very happy with her during the six years that she was spared to him. She bore him four children, among them Margaret, afterwards the wife of William Roper, 'likest her father as well in favour as in wit,' and destined to be his chief solace and comfort when he sorely needed both. After his marriage he took a house in Bucklersbury, St. Stephen's, Walbrook. Erasmus has left a very charming picture of More's household at Bucklersbury when he visited him both in 1505 and in 1510.

During the remainder of the reign of Henry VII, More chiefly occupied himself with his legal studies, with his translation of Pico, with his versions from Lucian's Dialogues—and the choice he made was significant, the Cynicus, the Menippus and the Philopseudes—and generally with classics and theology. It would seem also that he visited the Continent and made some inquiries into the educational studies and methods of the Universities of Paris and Louvain.

The accession of Henry VIII, to whom he addressed, and whom he welcomed in the longest and most important of his poems, the Carmen Gratulatorium, removed all impediments from his path, and More rapidly rose to distinction. He was made a Bencher of his Inn, and in September 1510 Under-sheriff of London, in those days a judicial office of great responsibility and honour. In addition to this his private practice as a barrister became so extensive that in a short time he was making an income estimated in our money at about £5,000 a year. Distinguished alike by his eminent abilities, his untiring industry, his integrity, his tact and the extraordinary charm of his manners, his temper and his conversation, he not only became generally one of the most popular men of his time, but was soon singled out as one peculiarly qualified for the nicest offices of negotiation and diplomacy. His connexion with the City had always been a close one; his courageous resistance to the subsidy of 1504 had been gratefully remembered by those who would have most smarted from it, and it seems that as early as 1508 he had been made free of the Mercers’ Company.

He had not long to wait for a flattering testimony to the high opinion which had been formed of his abilities by the City authorities. In 1514 the breaking off of the proposed marriage between Prince Charles, the son of Philip, Archduke of Austria, and Mary, the sister of Henry VIII, had not only led to unpleasantly strained relations between England and Castile and the Netherlands, but had provoked the English Government to take a step which most seriously affected the wool-trade. Wool was then the staple commodity of our merchandise, Flanders the chief centre of cloth manufacturing. As those manufactures were freely admitted into England, it was of great importance that our wool should be as freely admitted into Flanders. Henry, however, piqued and irritated by the step which Prince Charles’s advisers had taken, had retorted by prohibiting the exportation of wool to Holland and Zealand, in the hope of injuring Charles’s subjects by causing a wool-famine in the Netherlands. But before this there had been, both in London and in Antwerp, continual friction between the Flemish and English merchants on matters connected with the staple. As it was not at this time desirable that there should be any rupture between Castile and England, and as both Henry and Wolsey were anxious to re-establish friendly relations, it was decided in the spring of 1515 to send an Embassy to the Netherlands 'for the continuance of the treaties of intercourse between the late Kings of England and Castile.' At the head of the Embassy was Cuthbert Tunstall, then Archdeacon of Chester and shortly to become Master of the Rolls, and with him were joined Richard Sampson, Vicar-General of Tournay, and Sir Thomas Spinelly. On hearing of the proposed Embassy the London merchants petitioned that their grievances should also be considered, that they should be specially represented, and that More should represent them. Accordingly, with the King's consent, More was attached to the Embassy, with one John Clifford as his assistant. It appears that More's duties were strictly confined to the mercantile arrangements, which he found exceedingly troublesome. He arrived at Bruges on May 18, 1515, where he remained about four months. As the deputies appointed to confer with the Embassy could not agree on all points, they withdrew to Brussels 'to know their Prince's pleasure'; and More went on to Antwerp, where he made the acquaintance of Peter Giles, and employed his leisure time in writing the second book of the Utopia.

He returned to England towards the end of the year, after an absence of some seven months, by no means in love with a foreign Ambassador's position, but thankful, he says, for having had the privilege of living in intimacy with Tunstall, and for having made the acquaintance of Peter Giles. He had been so successful as a negotiator that both the King and Wolsey were anxious that he should give up his practice and devote himself to public life. But More had little faith either in kings as masters, or in the prospects of their servants. If he was too courteous and prudent even to hint—for he was at this time engaged on the first book of the Utopia—what he was putting into the mouth of Hythlodewaye, there can be no doubt that it represented his real opinions. But he had only staved off the unwelcome moment when greatness was to be thrust upon him. An accident soon turned the scale. It chanced that a vessel belonging to the Pope had been seized at Southampton and claimed as forfeit to the Crown. Campeggio the Papal Envoy demanded counsel to defend the right of his master. It was an important suit, and More was selected to represent the Pope. The King, himself an accomplished casuist who delighted in such displays, was present when More argued the case. He was so struck with More's ability as a lawyer and a logician that he importuned him to reconsider his former decision. There can only be one end to the importunities of kings under such circumstances, and in March 1517 we find Erasmus writing to Tunstall that More had been 'dragged to Court.' In one of his conversations with the King on this subject, Henry, probably in reply to some objection of More, said solemnly, 'First look up to God and after God to me,' words of which some eighteen years later More had occasion to remind him.

It is not difficult to understand More's unwillingness to change his position. A philosopher and a scholar to whom above all things the humanities and everything that pertained to them was dear, with as little worldly ambition as St. Francis or as his friend Erasmus, of the simplest tastes, blest and delighting in the communion of men of like temper with himself, contented with the fulfilment of his daily professional duties, happy in his simple home, of the strongest domestic affections—no man had so little to gain by what so many less happily tempered would have coveted so eagerly. It is moreover not unlikely that if he did not foresee the tragedy of the future in its terrible details he apprehended it generally. His life as a private man had been a very full one. Though his official and professional duties had kept him incessantly occupied he had taken the greatest interest in the foundation of his friend Colet’s School, St. Paul’s, which was opened in 1510, and in the regulation of its studies. He had more than once championed him against the opposition and calumnies of the Obscurantists, who were as active in England as they were in Germany. With letters and with men of letters he had been in daily communion. In 1510 Erasmus had been his guest at Bucklersbury, and had delighted his host by reading to him the inimitable Encomium Moriae composed under his roof. Nor had his own pen been idle. In addition to the Utopia he had found time to compose his Latin epigrams on the French War, and what was of more importance, his epoch-marking History of Richard III—‘the first example,’ according to Hallam, ‘of good English language, pure and perspicuous, well chosen, without vulgarisms and pedantry.’

In 1510 a great sorrow had befallen him, for, in that year, he had lost his first wife, who had left him with four helpless children, the eldest of whom was only six years of age. If before the year had run out he had brought home a second bride, this is to be attributed, not to any want of respect or affection for the wife whom he had lost, but to the necessity of finding a kindly and trustworthy guardian for his children. This lady, who was a widow seven years older than her husband, reminds us occasionally, it must be admitted, of Xantippe, and we have it on the authority of her husband that she was nec bella nec puella, as he more than once playfully observed to her; but she proved a good housekeeper and was kind to his children. Shortly after his second marriage he is said to have left his house at Bucklersbury and settled at Crosby Place, Bishopsgate.

His entrance into public life was the turning-point in his career. Honours and preferments quickly followed. In 1518 he was Master of the Requests, a month afterwards sworn of the Privy Council. In 1520 he attended the King to the Field of the Cloth of Gold. In 1521 he was knighted and made Under-Treasurer. In April 1523 he was chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, probably at the King’s request. In 1526 he succeeded Sir Richard Wingfield as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and in the same year held an office—one of a committee of three appointed to confer daily with the King—which brought him into close communion with Henry and led to the affectionate intimacy of which Roper speaks. The extraordinary success with which in the summer of 1529 he conducted the negotiations at the Treaty of Cambray—‘procuring,’ says Roper, ‘far more benefits unto his realm than at that time by the King and Council was possible to be compassed’—led immediately to the climax of his honours. On October the 19th of that year the Great Seal was taken from Wolsey, and on the 25th transferred to More.

Over the chief events of More's Chancellorship, namely his attitude to the Reformation and his persecution of the Reformers, as well as on what led to his fall and death, we must pause.

Few incidents in history have been so little understood and so much misrepresented as the part he played in the great schism. It seems indeed to involve inexplicable contradictions. The mildest, the kindliest, the most benevolent of men appears suddenly transformed into the harshest and austerest of fanatics, and undoubtedly connived at many cruel actions. A man who in theory was not only the advocate of religious toleration, but upheld as an ideal a religion so liberal and catholic that it differed in no respect from that of Plato and Cicero, becomes in practice the stern and uncompromising champion of mere and rigid dogma. Many of the charges against him, it is true, fall to the ground on investigation, for some, perversion and exaggeration are responsible. But there can be no doubt that when he described himself in his epitaph as furibus homicidis haereticisque molestus he interpreted both his temper and his attitude. He may not have been responsible for the law which he administered when he sent Bilney, Tewkesbury, Bayfield and Bainham to their terrible death, but there can be no doubt that he approved of it, and would have been the last to consent to its repeal. It is clear from his Apology that he submitted many, if not to the torture of the rack, to the severest corporal punishment, and it is abundantly clear from his writings and correspondence generally that he thought no measures too stringent for the extirpation of heresy. His controversial works, particularly the Vindicatio Henrici VIII published under the pseudonym of Gulielmus Rosseus, and his Dialogue against heresies, are written with an intemperance, a coarseness and an acrimony which must amaze every one who knows him as he appears in his other writings and in the other passages of his life.

But this is easily explained and as easily reconciled with all that we love and all that we honour in the man who in temper and character most nearly realizes the Socrates of the Apology, Crito and Phaedo. To More, from his boyhood upwards, nothing was so sacred and so dear as the Church of his fathers. Its ritual, its ceremony, its doctrines, its authority were to him what the Ark of the Covenant was to the ancient Israelites. Like Savonarola, like his friends Colet and Erasmus, he denounced the ignorance, the worldliness, the vices, the corruption generally of its unworthy servants, and he allowed himself—for wit and humour are difficult to restrain—a licence in satire which might, like Swift's Tale of a Tub, seem at times to involve more than was intended. But heresy he regarded with horror. In orthodoxy, and in orthodoxy alone, was salvation. He had no more notion that what he had written about the religion and the religious tolerance of the Utopians would be taken to indicate his real opinions than that what he had written about communism would be taken to indicate what as a statesman he was prepared to put in practice. It was as pure an extravaganza as the Ecclesiazusae and the Abbey of the Thelemites.
When, therefore, in 1520 Luther, bursting the bonds of reformation in the sense of the term in which More understood it and was himself contributing to further it, initiated heresy in his _De Captivitate Babylonica_, More at once became alarmed. He was drawn into the controversy against his will, thinking at first that Luther's book would carry in itself its own condemnation. But he soon found that he was mistaken and must gird up his loins for the battle. By the time he had become Chancellor the Pope had not only been denounced as Antichrist, but was in prison; Rome had been sacked, and some forty thousand Christians, so it was said, massacred in her streets; the Peasant Wars had deluged Germany with blood; the Anabaptist insurrection had let loose every element of lawlessness and horror, More's correspondent Cochlaeus assuring him that for all this Lutheranism, and Lutheranism alone, was responsible. Tyndale's Bible and many other publications were spreading the heresy throughout England, and even into his own household it had made its way. 'Friend Roper,' he had sadly said, while as yet the cloud was but a speck upon the horizon, 'I pray God that some of us, high as we seem to sit upon the mountains, treading heretics under our feet like ants, live not to see the day when we gladly would wish to be at league with them, to let them have their churches quietly to themselves, so that they would be contented to let us have ours quietly to ourselves.' What, in More's opinion, was at stake was the whole fabric of society and government, the temporal and eternal salvation of Christendom. He was in truth witness to the breaking-up of the life and work of ten centuries, the dissolution of an old, the initiation of a new world. He stood in a similar position to the position of Burke two centuries and a half later. Both were mistaken, both were in the right; mistaken, for they were not seers and could not discern the future; in the right, for they read correctly what was directly involved in what they saw and what the immediate consequences would be. Both were in panic, for in both alarm had been intensified by acute sensibility, by imaginations easily impressed and kindled, and by misinformation. When More accepted the Seals the course which his fears, his connexions and his conscience had, as a private man, directed him to take, he was now, as the chief official of the Crown, compelled by oath to take: for a part of the oath administered to him as Lord Chancellor was an assurance that he would 'use of his power to destroy all manner of heresies.' What is supposed to be the greatest blot on his memory—the execution of Bilney, Bayfield, Tewkesbury and Bainham—he has himself justified on grounds the sufficiency of which is, from his point of view, indisputable. Their lives were taken that many other lives might be saved. Examples were necessary that frenzy might not become epidemic. Admitting, then, without reserve that More was a persecutor of the Protestants, that in practice he was party to many very cruel actions, and that as a controversialist he employed all the legitimate weapons of indignation and contempt, it may yet be contended, that there was nothing incompatible in this with the gentleness and benevolence which in all the other actions of his life he displays. In this connexion it would be unjust to him to omit an anecdote which Harpsfield relates. When Roper, seduced by some of Luther's books, had taken up with the new heresy, his father-in-law reasoned with him and endeavoured to bring him back to orthodoxy, but in vain. Meeting shortly afterward with his daughter Margaret, he said, 'Meg, I have borne a long time with thy husband. I have reasoned and argued a long time with him and still given him my poor fatherly counsel; but I perceive none of all this can call him home again. And, therefore, Meg, I will no longer dispute with him, nor yet will I give him over; but I will go another way to work, and get me to God and pray for him.' And of one thing we may be very sure, that this was neither the first nor the last time that he thus tempered controversy and persecution.

But to turn to More in another capacity. As Lord Chancellor his industry, his integrity, and his incorruption when corruption was universal, have been admitted even by his enemies. When he took office there were, says Stapleton, causes which had remained undecided for twenty years; but 'he presided so dexterously and so successfully that once, after taking his seat, and deciding a case, when the next case was called there was no second case for trial, such a thing is said never to have happened before or since.' As a rule, every afternoon he sat in his open hall that all who had suits or complaints might have free access to him. Many stories are told of his refusal to accept from suitors what his predecessors had come to regard as the perquisites of their office, and of the scrupulous impartiality of his administration of justice. 'If,' he once said to one of his sons-in-law who had, on the grounds of kinship, expected to be favoured, 'my father whom I dearly love were on one side and the devil whom I sincerely hate were on the other, the devil should have his rights.' The two and a half years during which More occupied the Woolsack are certainly to be numbered among its brightest annals.

Till the spring of 1532 there had been no cloud on the intimate and even affectionate relations which existed between More and the King. The King had frequently visited him at Chelsea, wandering about the garden with his arm round his favourite's neck; and it had been at Henry's urgent request that More had accepted the Chancellorship. But the two men were soon to stand in very different relations. As early as September 1527 Henry had informed him of the scruples which were beginning to trouble him about the legitimacy of his marriage with Catherine. More promised to study the question. He did so, and satisfied himself that there was nothing to justify the dissolution of the marriage. This he frankly acknowledged to the King, and it appears to have been agreed between them that until More could arrive at a different conclusion he should be silent on the subject and confine himself to his ordinary duties. He became Chancellor against his will, being probably well aware of the King's motives in conferring the honour upon him, but remained silent. The King then became importunate—Was his friend still of the same opinion, was he still unable to serve him? Then More wrote: 'It is grievous in my heart that I am not able to serve your Grace in this matter... but I ever bear in my mind the words which your Highness spoke to me on my first coming into your noble service, bidding me first look up to God and after God to you.'

Meanwhile the events which preceded the divorce and the rupture with Rome took place, and More, finding his position increasingly embarrassing, resigned the Seals. Then came the rupture, the divorce, and the marriage with Anne Boleyn. On all these subjects More expressed publicly no opinion; he avoided the Court and absented himself from the Coronation of the new Queen. Next ensued the affair of the Maid of Kent. The King was furious. Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, was accused of misprision of treason, convicted, imprisoned and ruinously fined. More, who had been suspected of complicity, was examined; but as the only evidence against him was that he had written a letter to the Maid advising her to attend to her devotions and not meddle in the affairs of princes, his name was struck out of the Bill of Attainder, and the King contented himself with depriving him of his salary. ‘Master More,’ said the Duke of Norfolk, ‘it is perilous striving with Princes; the revenge of Princes is death.’ ‘Is that all, my Lord?’ replied More, with a smile; ‘then, in good faith, the difference between your Grace and me is, that I shall die to-day and you to-morrow.’

But the long struggle in which More endeavoured to reconcile his loyalty as a subject to his sovereign and his loyalty as a Christian to his conscience was soon to cease. In March 1534 the Act of Succession was passed. It limited the succession to the issue of the King and of Anne Boleyn, but to it was appended a formula declaring the Princess Mary to be illegitimate, and forbidding obedience to any foreign potentate. More had no difficulty in expressing on oath his assent to the settlement of the Crown on the offspring of the new marriage; but assent to the Bill involved assent to what the formula implied, the illegality of the marriage with Catherine and the repudiation of the Pope as head of the Church. Such was the oath which More was required to take, or, at his peril, to refuse. He received a summons to appear at Lambeth. He knew his hour had come. 'Son Roper,' he said to his daughter Margaret's husband, 'I thank our Lord the field is won.' As he left his house for the last time he would not allow his wife and children to follow him, as they were accustomed to do, to the boat, for he usually went as then he did by river, but 'pulled the wicket after him and shut them from him.' That evening he was in the custody of the Abbot of Westminster, and four days afterwards in the Tower.

Nearly fifteen months intervened between his arrival at his prison and the final scene. The history of that time is written in his own correspondence, and in the biographies of Roper, of Stapleton and of Cresacre More; and no story, with one obvious exception, so noble and so pathetic has ever been told of man since Plato related how Socrates addressed his judges, refuted Crito, and passed his last hours on earth.

When More left his house at Chelsea, he no doubt saw that there could be only one end to the course which he was taking; but what removed him from the pale of jurisdiction which affected only his liberty and property and brought him within reach of the law which inflicted the death sentence was the Act of Supremacy. He could now no longer reply to questions intended to incriminate him as he replied to Cromwell, 'I am the King's faithful subject and daily bedesman. I say no harm, I think no harm.' For the new Act provided that it was not only high treason to deny the King's title to supremacy over the Church, but to refuse to acknowledge it. On the first of July 1534, after many harassing examinations, he stood at the Bar in Westminster Hall, before the Lord Chancellor and nine other judges. In the indictment was included much which was false and much which was irrelevant, and More pleaded not guilty. But as before, so now, he would not acknowledge the title of the King to Supremacy over the Church. On the same day the jury returned a verdict of guilty; sentence of death was passed upon him, and what one of his successors on the Woolsack has described as 'the blackest crime that ever has been perpetrated in England under the form of law' had been committed by that jury and by those judges.

He was led out of court, for he was very feeble, by his old friend Sir William Kingston, Constable of the Tower, who accompanied him as far as the Swan Inn, near London Bridge, where the guards in charge and the throng of people paused. There Kingston had to leave him, and More, seeing the tears running down his friend's cheeks, tried to comfort him, promising that he would pray for him—would pray that they might meet and be 'merry together' in heaven. On the way, probably as he approached the Tower, his son John threw himself at his feet and implored his blessing. Calmly it was given, more calmly than it was received. The procession moved on. He had now arrived at the Tower Wharf, where his daughter Margaret was awaiting him. On seeing her father she rushed forward, 'pressing in,' writes Roper, who witnessed the scene, 'amongst the midst of the throng and company of the guard that with halberts and bills went round about him, hastily ran to him, and there openly, in sight of them all, embraced him and took him about the neck and kissed him.’ The frenzy of her grief was such that she could only utter the words, ‘Oh, my father! Oh, my father!’ Then she kneeled that she might receive his benediction. ‘Take patience, Margaret,’ he said with composure, after giving it, ‘and do not grieve. God has willed it so. For many years didst thou know the secret of my heart.’ She rose and left him, but again she returned, ‘as one that had forgotten herself,’ throwing her arms round his neck and covering his face with kisses. It was a scene which brought tears into the eyes of all who witnessed it, the very guards themselves, we are told, were weeping. At last she withdrew, and for More the bitterness of death had passed.

The few days that remained to him he spent not in preparation for what his whole life had been a preparation, but in endeavouring to cheer and console those who loved him, in assuring those who did not that he had no intention of saving his life by recantation, in sending little remembrances of himself to those who would treasure them, and in cheery and often humorous conversation with the officials of the Tower. On Sir Thomas Pope informing him, early in the morning of the day fixed for his execution, that it was the King’s will that it should take place at nine o’clock, he replied, ‘I am bounden to his Highness that it pleaseth him so shortly to rid me from the miseries of this wretched world; and there will I not fail earnestly to pray for his Grace, both here and also in the world to come.’ He also expressed his gratitude to the King for consenting to his request that his daughter Margaret should be present at his burial. As he left the Tower-gate on his way to the scaffold, a poor woman came from her house and offered him a cup of wine. He courteously thanked her, but declined it, saying, 'Christ at His Passion drank no wine, but gall and vinegar.' The scaffold, which had been hurriedly erected, was very unsteady, and shook as he placed his foot on the ladder. Turning to the lieutenant who was standing by he said 'merrily,' 'I pray thee see me safe up, and for my coming down let me shift for myself.' In accordance with custom the executioner begged his forgiveness. More turned to him, kissed him and said, 'Thou wilt do me this day a greater benefit than ever any mortal man can be able to do me'; and then, as he probably saw that there was some danger of the man's nerve failing him, added, 'Pluck up thy spirits, man, and be not afraid to do thine office. My neck is very short; take heed therefore that thou strike not awry for saving of thine honesty.' He then laid his head on the block, but suddenly raising it, said in a low voice, 'Stay till I have moved my beard; that at least has not committed treason'—a touch of humour equally characteristic, but not so pointed as the last inimitable request which Socrates uncovered his face to utter.

The axe fell; and the blood of the wisest, the noblest and most faithful of his servants was on the head of a brutal and stupid tyrant. When the Emperor Charles V heard of More's death from the English ambassador the comment he made on it was: 'Well, this, we will say, if we had been the master of such a servant we would rather have lost the best city of our dominions than have lost such a counsellor.'

More is the English Socrates, and if we except what may be called the accidents of his career, the facts, namely that he inherited narrowing superstitions which he could not cast off, and that in high office he served his country, and was thus involved in transactions and controversies little becoming a philosopher, the parallel is so close that nothing is wanting to complete it.

II. ORIGIN AND INSPIRATION OF THE UTOPIA

Where and under what circumstances the Utopia was composed we have already seen. As it is, whether regarded as a work of art, as a satire, or in relation to its didactic purpose a mirror of the age which witnessed its composition, on the general characteristics of that age a few words are necessary. When More took up his pen the knell of the Mediaeval World had sounded. The World of the Renaissance, which had fully developed itself in Italy, was beginning to assume definition in England. On all sides the horizons of intelligence and experience were being enlarged. The study of Greek had been introduced into our Universities and into two or three of our schools, and was being pursued with enthusiasm by influential men. A regular communication had been opened with the most eminent scholars of the Continent, some of whom had been our visitors. The Greek Testament and Novum Instrumentum of Erasmus had made an era not merely in Theology but in theological thought, practically revolutionizing both. With the Christian Scriptures had been associated the Platonic writings, and the philosophy and literature generally of ancient Greece and Rome were beginning curiously and reverently to be studied. And to all this the invention of moveable types had given wings. The great astronomical discovery of Copernicus, and the geographical discoveries associated with the names of Dias, of Cabo, of Columbus, of Vespucci had opened out new vistas and new paths to speculation and enterprise. The Intercursus Magnus had laid the foundations of International Law. Social life was being slowly transformed; the old Feudalism was dying; the old Chivalry was all but dead. The Church was still unchanged; but already the distant murmur of the Reformation was beginning to be heard. In a word, what were at work everywhere, in different stages of definition and in different degrees of activity, were the forces which dissolved the world of the Middle Ages and constructed the world of the Renaissance and of the Reformation.

We have seen how More lived in intimate communion with the apostles of the New Learning, how closely he was in touch with the Humanists and with all that pertained to the humanities, how devoted a student of the Greek and Roman Classics. But he was much more than a student and a humanist: he was a lawyer, a churchman in his instincts, and a politician, keenly interested in legal, ecclesiastical and political questions. Singularly observant of all that passed before his eyes, of acute sensibility, most sympathetic, and of infinite benevolence, he was eminently a philanthropist. With this temper, with these tastes and with these accomplishments, he surveyed the world which was passing round him, both at home and on the Continent. That world he has painted in the first book of the Utopia. Let us glance at it.

On the Papal Chair sat indeed a Pope (Leo X) who was mild and humane, and who preferred peace to war, but two years before it had been filled by Julius II, whose pontificate had been one long and bloody struggle to extend his dominions and aggrandize his family. The restoration of Hungary and Bohemia, the annexation of the Netherlands, of Franche Comté, of Artois, and of Castile and Aragon, by marriage, by intrigue or by war, may be said to sum up the aims of the Emperor Maximilian. In France the 'most Christian King' Louis XII, who had sacrificed thousands of lives, and had been prepared to sacrifice thousands more, in a most un-Christian attempt to possess himself of Milan and the two Sicilies, had just been succeeded by Francis I, who was about to enter on a vaster course of rapacious conquest; Ferdinand of Aragon, whose whole career had been little else than an ignoble record of rapacity and fraud, was scheming to wrest Navarre from France. To come nearer home, Henry VIII, burning for military glory, had twice invaded France, to find on the first occasion that he had been made the dupe of his greedy father-in-law and the laughingstock of Europe. To retrieve this disaster, a second expedition, with himself at the head of it, had, at a vast expense, been fitted out. The result had been a series of blunders, a futile victory won by an accident, and the capture of two unimportant towns, Terouenne and Tournay; Henry returning in ridiculous pomp to concert with Wolsey a third expedition. Animated by the same spirit as his more conspicuous brethren, James IV, the King of Scotland, had invaded England, to pay the penalty of his mingled ambition, perfidy and recklessness with his own life and with the lives of ten thousand of his countrymen. Of the entire indifference of the sovereigns of that day to the interests of their subjects, or indeed to everything but the gratification of their own tastes and pleasures, whether at ruinous expense in pomps and tournaments and every form of profligate expenditure, or in the pursuit at any cost of misery and blood to their kingdoms and dependants,—of this the literature of those times is full. (For illustrations see the Notes.) The internal condition of England was deplorable. Agriculture had been almost destroyed by the wholesale conversion of arable into pasture land for the purpose of breeding sheep to obtain wool. Hundreds of miles of country, once occupied by thriving hamlets and villages, had been enclosed and converted into sheepwalks. The effects of this had been to turn thousands of able-bodied men and their families adrift on the roads and in the towns, to become beggars and thieves. While the peasant and labourer were either starving or swinging on the gibbet—for they were hanged in hundreds for petty larcenies—the nobility, capitalists and abbots were revelling in the wealth which had been acquired by the infliction of this misery. (For illustrations of all this see the Notes.) Well might More make Hythlodæye say that in Christian Commonwealths he 'could see nothing but a certain conspiracy of rich men procuring their own commodities under the name and title of the Commonwealth.' Nor were there wanting other sources of distress and evil. In London and in the towns the administration of justice was conducted with merciless severity. The punishment for larceny was death; and each year many hundreds, sometimes twenty at a time, perished on the gallows. Sanitary regulations were unknown. The poor lived like pigs.
their habits being too loathsome to describe. Many of the streets of the city were little better than open sewers, and even the Strand is described in an Act of Parliament passed in 1523 as ‘very noyous, foul and jeopardous.’ The consequence was the periodical visitation of decimating epidemics, while fever and diseases of all kinds were generally busy. Public hospitals, with the exception of St. Bartholomew’s, there were none; and it was not till two years after the Utopia was written, till the foundation, that is to say, of the Royal College of Physicians in 1518 by More’s friend Linacre, that any attempt was made to organize medical science. Such was the world—the elements of which, whether as inspiration or theme, entered into the composition of the Utopia.

The work had probably been in More’s mind some years before its inception; at all events, it is certain that some of the subjects with which it deals had occupied his attention. Dr. Lupton remarks that in his Epigrammata, written probably as early as 1500, More had dwelt on the subject of greed, public and private, and on the difference between a lawful king and a tyrant (see the Epigrams ‘In avarum,’ the titles ‘Dives avarus pauper est sibi,’ the ‘Sola Mors Tyrannicida est,’ ‘Quid inter Tyrannum et Principem,’ ‘Bonum Principem esse Patrem non Dominum,’ ‘Regem non satellitium sed virtus reddit tutum,’ and, most remarkable of all, ‘Populus consentiens regnum dat et aufert,’ ‘Quis optimus reipublicae status’. In the Carmen Gratulatorium, addressed on his accession to Henry VIII, he had ventured to hint a contrast between the ‘end of bondage’ and ‘the beginning of freedom,’ between the time ‘when public offices were sold’ and the time when they 'would be freely bestowed on the good.' His studies, too, of the De Civitate Dei must have familiarized him with the notion of an ideal republic.
ORIGIN AND INSPIRATION OF 'UTOPIA'

But the work was probably suggested and inspired by Erasmus. We have only to turn to the Adagia and to the Encomium Moriae to see how much there was in common between what Erasmus had already expressed and what More was about to express. In these works will not, indeed, be found any hint either for the framework or for the method and tone adopted and assumed by More. But there is the same analysis of the maladies under which the political communities of those times were labouring; the same attribution to the same causes, the ignorance, the selfishness, the rapacity, the ambition of princes; the same contempt for priests and lawyers; the same exposure of the mischief and misery caused by the employment of mercenary troops; the same pity for the poor; the same indignation at oppression and undue severity in the administration of justice. And, what is still more striking, we find Erasmus expressing sympathy with Communism, and acknowledging that it would be a remedy for the greater part of the evils then prevalent. In commenting on the proverb 'Amicorum communia omnia' he says: 'Quod quidem si tam esset fixum in hominum animis, quam nulli non est in ore, profecto maxima malorum parte vita nostra levaretur .... Sed dictu mirum quam non placeat, immo quam lapidetur a Christianis Platonis illa communitas, cum nihil unquam ab ethnico philosopho dictum sit magis ex Christi sententia.' Adagia, Ed. 1606, p. 109, sub cap. 'Amicorum communia omnia.' Nor must we forget the inspiring influence of his friend Colet, who, in a public sermon preached at Easter, 1513, before the King, had had the courage to inform him that wars were seldom undertaken 'except from hatred and ambition,' and that, instead of imitating the examples of Caesars and Alexanders, it much more became a Christian prince to imitate the example of Christ.'

III. FRAMEWORK AND MODELS

The notion of an ideal commonwealth, as the expression in a fable of what would at once be a standard and touchstone for social and political regulations—a counsel of perfection, and a satire by implication on existing conditions and institutions—was not new. More had several precedents, and, for his details, laid many works under contribution. The references of Hythlodaye to Plato indicate the first and most important of More's models. To the Republic he was indebted generally for the idea of a pattern commonwealth based on Communism, and to it and to Plato's other dialogues for the suggestion of the dramatic setting and dialectic of the first book: the many details which he has borrowed from it have been pointed out in the notes. But his indebtedness to the Timaeus and Critias was almost equally great. In Atlantis he found the archetype, in the physical description of Atlantis a model for the physical description of Utopia. And he found more. He learned from the artist of these dialogues the art of making fiction assume a form almost indistinguishable from truth, the art of 'noble lying.' But a subtler influence is to be traced to Plato, the influence of the Platonic Socrates, with his delicate play of irony, his jest and seriousness so finely and bafflingly mingled that no wit not of kinship with his own can distinguish them. To the Romance which comes next in order, and which, though written with the same object as More's, has in its framework nothing in common, the Cyropaedia of Xenophon, he is under no obligation. Of Cicero's De Republica he could of course have made no use. But Plutarch's Instituta Laconica he had certainly studied, and has borrowed some details from it which are pointed out in the Notes. It is possible, it is indeed not improbable, that he may have been influenced by a work which at first sight appears to have nothing in common with his own, the Germania of Tacitus. There can be little doubt that under the guise of an ethnographical and historical treatise Tacitus was, like More, satirizing by implication the morals and institutions of his own nation and countrymen; that his object was to contrast the characters, habits and polity of his virtuous savages with those of the degenerate Romans, just as More contrasts the Europeans of his own time with the Utopians. The structure and method of the Germania and of the second book of the Utopia are closely analogous. Both begin with a description of the physical features of the country described in them; both proceed to an account in detail of all those peculiarities in public and private, in agricultural and political life which stand in the sharpest contrast to what obtained in civilized Europe, and in each many of the peculiarities most emphasized are curiously similar. (For some of the most striking of these parallels see the Notes.)

As his acquaintance with Saint Augustine's De Civitate Dei was very intimate, we naturally look for traces of its influence on his work. Dr. Lupton discerns it 'in the conception of a perfect order as it prevailed in the city of God: in the due subordination of every member of the society, each being glad to do his own work and fall into his own place: in the community of goods, and in the use and limitation of bond-service.'

But what furnished More, not with the notion, but with the actual framework of the Utopia was something very different from any of these works. In September 1507 appeared, printed at St. Dié in the Vosges, as an appendix to a little book entitled Cosmographiae Introductio, to which was appended a Latin translation of Amerigo Vespucci's four voyages as described by himself—Quatuor Americi Vesputii Navigationes. In this tract Vespucci describes how, on his second voyage, he sailed from Lisbon on May the 14th, 1501, passed the Canary Islands to Cape Verde, and explored 'those regions.' He there found a people leading a life very similar in many respects to More's Utopians. They had no property, but held all things in common, living according to nature. They had no king, no sovereignty, and every one was his own master. They had a great quantity of gold but regarded it of no account. Of pearls, jewels, and all such things as Europeans prize, they thought nothing.' More's use of this is obvious.

But it is on the description of the fourth voyage that More founds his fable. Vespucci here relates how, again setting sail in May 1503 with six ships, they crossed the line, and in August sighted an island, now identified as Fernando Noronha; how the chief vessel was here wrecked; how, getting separated from the other ships, he fell in with one of them after eight days; how they then both made for Bahia, and, after a stay of seventeen days there, proceeded southwards till they arrived at a harbour (Cape Frio); how, after freighting their ships with Brazil wood, they returned to Lisbon, leaving behind at Cape Frio a small garrison or factory, 'castellum,' of twenty-four men with arms, and provisions: 'Relictis in castello prefato Christicolis xxiiij, et, cum illis, xiiij machinis ac aliis pluribus armis, una cum provisione pro sex mensibus sufficiente, necnon pacata nobiscum telluris illius gente . . . . introivimus' (that is, reached home). Before leaving, Vespucci and his comrades had penetrated some forty leagues inland, presumably to ascertain, among other things, the disposition of the inhabitants previous to the establishment of the factory. More represents Hythlodaye as one of the twenty-four men who had been left by Vespucci in the factory. To Hythlodaye's assertion, that he went travelling about through many countries with five of the twenty-four men who had been left in the factory after Vespucci's departure, there is nothing to correspond in Vespucci's narrative.

More has, with great art, completely baffled all attempts to localize or identify Utopia. For, he represents Hythlodaye as Vespucci's companion, not merely on his last voyage, but on his last three voyages; so that we do not know whether Utopia lay among the 'townes and cities and weale publique full of people, governed by good and hollsome lawes,' which he visited with his five companions after leaving the 'castellum,' or whether it was one of the communities described above, as having been visited in the second voyage.

The mystification was kept up with much humour in two letters, one written by Peter Giles to Busleyden, and one written by More himself to Giles, prefixed to the work when it was printed. Giles tells Busleyden that More had been reproaching himself for not having ascertained from Hythlodaeus where Utopia was situated. Hythlodaeus had, indeed, said something on the subject, but it unfortunately happened that, when Hythlodaeus was speaking, More's attention had been diverted by the entrance of a servant who whispered in his ear. And Giles himself had been equally unlucky; for, though he was listening, one of the company who had caught a cold chanced to cough so loudly, just at the critical moment, that it drowned what Hythlodaeus said. However, he would do his best, he adds, to get the information, if Hythlodaeus could be found, which was doubtful; for some reported that he had died on his journey home, others that he had gone back to Utopia. More also writes, humorously importuning Giles to get this information from Hythlodaeus, for he felt ashamed to have written so elaborately about a place of which he did not even know the site. And he had another reason, he says, for repairing this great and most unfortunate omission: he had heard that a devout and godly man, a Professor of Divinity, had expressed a wish to go out to Utopia, as a missionary, and spread still further the Christianity which some of the Utopians had adopted; indeed, he indulged the hope of becoming Bishop of Utopia. And if, added More, you do see Hythlodaeus, have the goodness to ask him if the bridge of Amaurote is five hundred paces? for 'my boy John Clement says that two hundred of those paces must be plucked away, for that the river contains there not above three hundred paces in breadth.' The matter in itself was a trifle, he continues, but scrupulous accuracy had been his aim, and this would be a test of the fidelity of his memory. 'For I will take good hede that there be in my book nothynge false.' This elaborate mystification probably had another purpose than a merely artistic one.

More must have known the peril he incurred by the publication of such a book, and he was no doubt anxious to find some loophole for escape should awkward questions be asked. He wished, therefore, to emphasize its purely fictitious character—the fact that it was a mere work of art, a fantastical and ingenious fable. By connecting Hythlodaye with Vespucci he gave it an air of reality which could deceive no one, and at the same time left it open to him to say that it was a mere parody of travellers' tales, a satire on one of the most popular forms of literary fraud. To scholars, of course, the very nomenclature employed would betray its origin. Utopia is 'Nusquamia,' 'no-place land'; its founder, Utopus, 'no-place one'; its capital, Amaurote, 'a phantom city'; its river, the Anyder, 'a river which is no water'; the Anemolians, 'people of the wind'; the Polyclerites, 'babblers of much nonsense'; Achoriens, 'those who have no place on earth'; the very name of the hero, Hythlodaye, signifies 'skilled in babble,' or possibly 'a distributor of babble.' But More's own comments, and especially the closing paragraph, would be a sufficient apology for him, should any one propose to take him seriously. Certainly, as an artist, he was the master of De Foe and Swift, and neither has excelled him in 'the art of feigning.'
The dramatic opening and setting were evidently suggested by Plato's Republic, while in the report of the conversation at Morton's table, we are still more closely reminded of Plato's Dialogue, Morton corresponding to Cephalus, Hythloday e to Socrates, and the lawyer to Thrasy machus. But the framework is artfully linked with the facts of More's own life. He relates how, when on the embassy with Tunstall to the Low Countries, as he was one morning leaving the Cathedral Church at Antwerp after hearing Mass, he saw his friend Peter Giles in conversation with a stranger. To that stranger, whose name was Raphael Hythloday e, Giles introduced him, telling him that Hythloday e was a most interesting man, an accomplished classical scholar, and one who had been a great traveller. The three then go on together to More's house and sit down on a bench in the garden. Hythloday e begins to talk of his adventures, and to describe how in the course of them he had come across many interesting communities, among them the commonwealth of the Utopians, whose customs and laws might well serve as examples to European countries. The conversation of the traveller is so entertaining, his learning and wisdom so apparent, that Giles expresses surprise that he had not made his way into some king's court, for he was sure that there was no prince living who would not welcome a man from whom he could learn so much, and whose counsel would be so useful to him. But Hythloday e replies that he has no taste for anything that a king or court could give him, to say nothing of the fact that princes are too much occupied with their own vain pleasures and greedy ambition to listen to such counsel as he could give them, that there is no place in courts for any but flatterers and parasites, as ignorant as they are envious. Even in England he had ‘chaunced upon such prowde, lewede, overthwarte and waywarde judgementes.’ Interested to hear that he had been in England, More elicits from him that he had resided there some four or five months, and had received much kindness from Cardinal Morton, of whose character Hythlodaye speaks with enthusiastic admiration. He then goes on to relate a conversation in which he once took part at Morton’s table. One of the guests, a certain lawyer, had been expressing his approval of the law which punished thieves with death, and his wonder at the fact that it had had so little effect in diminishing the crime. Upon this Hythlodaye took courage to say that it was a most cruel law, a punishment which greatly exceeded the offence—that the poor fellows stole that they might live, and that the true remedy for thieving was not to hang them, but to provide them with the means of getting an honest livelihood. ‘But,’ retorted the lawyer, ‘there are handycrafts, there is husbandry, ample opportunities for working, if they would avail themselves of them.’ This Hythlodaye denied. The country was full, he went on to say, of disbanded soldiers, either unfitted by their wounds or too old to learn trades, and of idle retainers and serving-men, who had lost or been turned adrift by their masters, and who, being accustomed to expensive habits and to swaggering about with swords and bucklers, would not condescend to ply a spade and mattock for poor wages. ‘Why these,’ replied the lawyer, ‘are just the men we want to maintain our glory in war.' This turns the question on to war and its ruinous social effects, on which Hythlodayye proceeded to enlarge. 'But,' he added, there are other reasons for the poverty, misery and crime which prevailed, namely, the selfishness of the landlords in enclosing and turning arable land into pasture': and on this, as well as on what it necessarily involved, he dilated at length. 'Remove these grievances,' he said, 'forbid enclosures, restore agriculture, put some restraint on the means by which the rich are able to aggrandize themselves at the expense of the poor, and you will have fewer thieves.'

The Cardinal, interrupting the lawyer, who was about to reply at length, then turned to Hythlodayye and said he should be glad to hear his reasons for thinking that theft should not be punished by death. These reasons Hythlodayye proceeded to give. In the course of his remarks, he referred to the customs of a certain Persian community which he had visited in his travels, namely, the Polylerites, as worthy of imitation in the use to which they put felons and serving-men. After a suggestion of the Cardinal's with respect to the treatment of vagabonds, the conversation was interrupted by a lively passage of arms between a certain Fool who happened to be standing by and a Friar. The Fool humorously suggested that beggars who through infirmity could not work should be quartered on religious houses, the men to become lay brethren and the women nuns. 'And what,' said the Friar, 'is to be done with us'? 'You,' replied the Fool, 'have been already provided for, when it was suggested that vagabonds should be kept in restraint and compelled to work.' This so enraged the Friar, and the altercation between insulter and insulted grew so hot, that the Cardinal deemed it expedient to nod to the Fool to withdraw.

Hythlodaye having finished his account of his experiences in England, the conversation then turns to Giles's former suggestion, that Hythlodaye should enter some prince's court, More insisting that for the Commonwealth's sake he ought to do so. Had not Plato said that realms could never prosper till their rulers were philosophers? and how could those rulers become philosophers till philosophers advised them? Again Hythlodaye points out the futility of such a plan, and we have an account of the occupations and characters of the princes of those days. Then occurs a passage which it is surprising that More could at that time have ventured to publish, in which he makes Hythlodaye—citing the example of the salutary decrees passed by the Achorians, 'a people situate over against the Island of Utopia'—enlarge on the uselessness and ruinous folly of Henry VIII's French wars. He then proceeds to depict the advisers and means by which princes are encouraged and supported in their evil courses, comparing the wise provisions made by the Macariens, 'a people not far distant from Utopia,' limiting the power of their kings. At last he comes to the contrast presented by the wise and goodly ordinances of the Utopians to what obtained in Europe, and to these in his subsequent remarks he continually refers. These repeated references to Utopia and the Utopians excite More's curiosity about them, and he begs Hythlodaye to give him a full and precise account of this wonderful place and those wonderful people. This, he says, he will gladly do; but it will take some time. More proposes that they should first have dinner, and then return into the garden. Dinner over, the three sit on the same bench on which they had been sitting before, and Hythlodaye begins his narrative. This occupies the whole of the second book, being uninterrupted by any remarks on the part of the listeners. The narrative concluded, the three friends go in to supper. Of some things Hythlodaye had said More could not approve; but he resolved, for the present at least, to keep this to himself, partly because Hythlodaye was weary, and partly because he was not sure whether he would like to be opposed.

Such is the plot—a masterpiece of dramatic skill and propriety.

V. PURPOSE OF THE WORK

The purpose of the Utopia was, as Erasmus said at the time, to point out where and from what causes the European Commonwealths, and more especially the English, with which More was most familiar, were at fault. And he deals with the subject politically, socially and economically, his method being threefold—first, by placing in the mouth of Hythlodaye direct comments on the evils and miseries prevalent in England and Europe, with an analysis of their causes and suggestions for their remedies; secondly, by describing the regulations, habits and institutions of the Utopians for his readers to draw their own conclusions, rejecting or accepting as exemplary what they please; and thirdly, by holding up the mirror to the vices and defects of existing commonwealths, by presenting them in contrast with their perfected correction in an ideal commonwealth. As examples of the first we have Hythlodaye's picture of the state of England and of the characters of princes, in the first book; his bitterly sarcastic remarks on leagues and treaties, in the seventh chapter of the second book; his delineation of the habits and characters of mercenary troops, in the eighth chapter; and his indignant protest against the tyranny of the rich over the poor, in the ninth. Examples of the second would be afforded by the numerous paradoxes and semi-serious suggestions in which the work abounds, such as the institution of a purely elective monarchy and the defence and adoption of Communism by the Utopians: their theory of the right of civilized states to the soil of waste countries; the limitation of labour to six hours a day for every citizen by the compulsory imposition of it on all citizens; the gratuitous presentation to the poor of every nation with which they are trading to the seventh part of all the goods exported; their mode of conducting war by the assassination of the leaders and by bribing the subjects of the enemy to commit treason; their contempt for military glory; their contempt for titles and ancestry; the horror with which they regard hunting—'the loweste, vyleste and most abjecte part of bocherye'; their detestation of priests and lawyers; their religion, and the extent to which religious toleration was carried; their employment of women as priests; the ceremonies before marriage; the regulations for the education of women; the encouragement of suicide in cases of painful and hopeless disease; and their mode of regarding death and conducting burials. Examples of the third would be the description of Amaurote, which is plainly contrasted with London, as the model of what a city should be, both architecturally and in relation to sanitary provisions; the description of the importance attached to study and culture, and the objects with which they are pursued; the account given of their domestic life—a life, it may be observed, realized by More in his own household; and the illustration generally of a polity in which the true ends and aims of legislation and government, as well as the mutual happiness of all classes of citizens, had been attained.

To inquire how far More was in earnest, or rather where he is in earnest, and where he is jesting in his Romance, is not altogether an idle question. Erasmus tells us, that even members of More's own family were sometimes puzzled to gather from his look or tone, whether he was speaking seriously, or whether he was joking. Like Socrates he moved in an atmosphere of irony. But no one who is acquainted with More's character and with the circumstances under which the work was written can doubt that, however much licence he may have allowed himself in giving the reins to his humour, his purpose was essentially a serious one. Perhaps the question could not be put better than it has been put by Sir James Mackintosh:

'The true notion of Utopia is, that it intimates a variety of doctrines, and exhibits a multiplicity of projects which the writer regards with almost every possible degree of approbation and shade of assent: from the frontiers of serious and entire belief, through gradations of descending plausibility, where the lowest are scarcely more than the exercises of ingenuity, and to which some wild paradoxes are appended, either as a vehicle, or as an easy means (if necessary) of disavowing the serious intention of the whole of this Platonic fiction.'—Life of More, 'Miscellaneous Works,' Vol. I. p. 423.
And side by side with this may be placed the remarks of Brewer:

'Though the Utopia was not to be literally followed—was no more than an abstraction at which no one would have laughed more heartily than More himself, if interpreted too strictly—Utopia might serve to show a corrupt Christendom what good could be effected by the natural instincts of men, when following the dictates of natural prudence and justice. If kings could never be elective in Europe, Utopia might show the advantage to a nation where kings were responsible to some other will than their own. If property could never be common, Utopia might teach men how great was the benefit to society, when the state regarded itself as created for the wellbeing of all, and not of a class or a favoured few. Literally, property could never be common except in Utopia; but it might be so in effect in Christian communities when capital and property were more widely diffused, when the enormous disproportion between the poor and the rich, the noble and the serf, was modified by social improvements, and the statute-book disencumbered of obsolete and unintelligible Acts, too often put in force to catch the unwary, and made an instrument of oppression by the crown lawyers.'—Reign of Henry VIII, Vol. II. pp. 290-1.

Indeed the student of the Utopia could not be admonished better than by the words of Chaucer's Nun's Priest:

'Taketh the fruyt and let the chaf be stille.'

VI. EARLY EDITIONS AND THE TRANSLATIONS

The first edition of the Utopia, in Latin, was printed at Louvain by Thierry Martin, towards the end of
INTRODUCTION

1516. To it was prefixed the letter of Peter Giles to Busleyden, dated Nov. 1, 1516; a letter of Ioannes Paludanus Cassiletensis to Peter Giles, with a set of ten elegiac verses, both of which were suppressed in the edition of 1518; some Latin verses by Gerardus Noviomagus and Cornelius Grapheus; the letter of Busleyden to More; and More's prefatory letter to Peter Giles; together with a representation of the Utopian alphabet, and a metre of four verses in the Utopian language. A second edition was printed by Gilles de Gourmont, at Paris, about the end of 1517. To it were added a letter addressed by Budé to Lupset acknowledging a presentation copy of the first edition, and expressing the delight with which he had read the work, and a second letter of More to Giles. This had been hurried out prematurely, without any corrections of the author, from Budé's wish to popularize the work by a smaller and more handy edition. Then appeared, in 1518, in two issues, one in March and another in November, the third edition, printed by Froben at Basle, embodying More's corrections. In 1519 the work was issued from the Juntine Press at Venice, and in the following year it is said to have been reprinted in quarto at Basle. This was, so far as is known, the last edition published in More's lifetime.

Of the translations Ralph Robynson's was the first, and it was published by Abraham Vele, at the sign of the 'Lambe' in St. Paul's Churchyard, in 1551, with a dedication to Cecil, afterwards Lord Burleigh. The letter of More to Peter Giles is all of the preliminary matter which he translated. But in 1556 appeared a second edition, carefully corrected and with many alterations, omitting the dedication to Cecil, but adding versions of Giles's letter to Busleyden, and the "meter of iiij verses." A third edition appeared in 1597, and a fourth in 1624. Since then it has been reprinted several times—by Dibdin, in 1808; by Professor Arber, in 1869; by Dr. Lumby, in 1879; by Robert Roberts, at Boston, in 1887; and by William Morris, at the Kelmscott Press, in 1893. All these are reprints of the second edition, Dr. Lupton being the first to reprint the editio princeps.

Till 1684 Robynson's was the only English version, but in that year appeared a new translation by the celebrated Gilbert Burnet, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury. It is closer to the Latin and more accurate than Robynson's, but it has not the charm of Robynson's racy and picturesque English. A work so characteristic of the English Renaissance finds much more appropriate expression in the diction and tone of that time, and what it loses in exact scholarship—though Burnet himself is by no means impeccable—it gains in affinity. The version of Arthur Cayly, which appeared in 1808, though it purported to be a new one, merely modified Burnet.

Of Ralph Robynson very little is known. He was born in Lincolnshire, in 1521, and received his early education at the Grantham and Stamford grammar schools, and was at both a schoolfellow of William Cecil, afterwards Lord Burleigh. He entered Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1536, at the age of fifteen, of which College he became, in June 1542, a Fellow.
Leaving Oxford, he settled in London, where he obtained the livery of the Goldsmiths' Company, and some employment in the service of Cecil. He came of a numerous and poor family, whose difficulties appear to have hampered him, and two appeals to Cecil for assistance are extant; but whether he responded to them does not appear. The withdrawal of the dedicatory epistle to his old schoolfellow from the second edition of his translation seems significant. That he was alive, and in poverty, in 1572 is certain from Cecil’s endorsement to his second appeal; but beyond that nothing more of him is known.

Robynson’s version of the Utopia is an excellent specimen of that style of translation which found its expression not in the simple and musical English of the versions of the Bible, but of that style of expression which was afterwards adopted in the Tudor versions of the Greek and Roman Classics, the characteristic excellences of which are vigour and dignity, the characteristic defects, diffuseness and cumbrousness. He had by no means an easy task with his original, for More’s Latin is often very involved and sometimes obscure. As a translator, though he is occasionally guilty of strange lapses, he is, as a rule, fairly trustworthy, and seldom fails to give the general sense correctly; at times indeed he is exceedingly felicitous, improving the original. His chief fault lies in his diffuseness and in an over-done accumulation of synonyms, which however has, at least sometimes, a not unpleasing effect. In addition to its delightful quaintness, its raciness, picturesqueness and vigour, the version is an important monument of the English of the first part of the sixteenth century.

It has not been thought necessary to print and annotate the preliminary matter in the Utopia; but, as Peter Giles’s letter to Busleyden, and More’s to Peter Giles, may almost be regarded as a part of the machinery of the fiction, they have been printed in an Appendix.
The moste vyctoryous and tryumphante Kynge of Englande, Henry the eight of that name, in all royal vertues Prince moste peerlesse, hadde of late in controversie with the right hyghe and myghtie king of Castell weightye matters, and of greate importaunce; for the debatement and final determination wherof the kinges Maieste sent me Ambassadour into flaunders, joined in commission with cuthebert Tunstall, a man doubteles owte of comparison, and whom the kinges maiestie of late, to the greate reioysyng of all men, did preferre to the office of maister of the Rolles. But of thys mans prayses I will saye nothynge; not bycause I do feare that small credence shalbe geuen to the testymony that commyth owt of a frindes mouthe, but bicause hys vertue and lernyng be greater and of more excellencye, than that I am able to prayse them; and also in all places so famous, and so perfectlye well knowne, that they nede not nor ought not of me to be praysed, onles I wolde seme to shew and set furth the brightenes of the sonne wyth a candell, as the Prouerbe sayth.

There met vs at Bruges (for thus yt was before agreed) they whome their princ hadde for that matter appoynted commyssyoners, excellente men all. The chiefe and the head of them was the Marcgraue (as they cal him) of Bruges, a right honorable man: but the wisest and the best spoken of them was George Temsice, prouoste of Casselles; a man not onlye by lernyng but also by nature of singuler eloquence, and in the lawes profoundelye lerned; but in reasonyng, and debatyng of matters, what by his naturall witte, and what by daylye exercise, suerlye he hadde fewe fellowes. After that we hadde ones or twise mette, and vpon certeyne poynettes or artycles could not fully and throughlye agre; they for a certeyne space toke their leaue of vs, and departed to Bruxelle, there to knowe theire princes pleasure. I in the meane tyme (for so my busynes laye) wente streyghte thens to Antwerpe.

Whyles I was there abydinge, often tymes amonge other, but whyche to me was more welcome then annye other, dyd vysite me one Peter Gyles, a Citisien of Antwerpe; a man there in hys contrey of honest reputatyon, and also preferred to hyghe promotyons, worthye truelye of the highest. For it is harde to saye whether the yong man be in lernynge or in honestye more excellent. For he is bothe of wonder ful vertuous condytyons, and also singulerlye well lerned, and towardes all sortes of people excedynge gentyl; but towardes hys fryndes so kynde harted, so louynge, so faythfull, so trustye, and of so earneste affectyon, that yt were verye harde in any place to fynd a man, that wyth hym in all poynettes of frendshyppe maye be compared. No man can be more lowlye or courteys. No man vsithe lesse symulatyon or dyssymulatyon; in no man ys more prudente symplycyte. Besydes this, he is in his talke and communycatyon so merye and pleasaunte, yea, and that wythout harme, that, throughe hys gentyllyntertainment and hys swete and delectable communycatyon, in me was greatlye abated and dymynshed the fervent desyre that I hadde to see my natyue contreye, my wyffe and my chyldren; whome then I dyd muche longe and couett to see, bicause that at that tyme I hadde byn more then .iiii. monythes from them.
Upon a certeyne daye when I hadde herde the deuyne seruyce in our ladies churche, whych is the fayrest, the moste gorgious and curyous churche of buyldynge in all the cytye, and also moste frequented of people, and the seruice beynge done, was readye to goo home to my lodgyng, I chaunced to espie thys forsayde Peter talkynge wyth a certeyne straunger, a man well stryken in age, wyth a blake sonne burned face, a longe bearde, and a cloke caste homely aboute hys shoulders; whom by hys fauour and apperrel forthwythe I iudged to be a maryner. But when thys Peter sawe me, he cummythe to me and saluteth me. And as I was abowte to answe hym:‘see you thys man?’ sayeth he (and therwyth he poyneted to the man that I sawe hym talkynge wyth before). ‘I was mynded,’ quod he, ‘to brynge hym streyghte home to you.’ ‘He should have bene verye welcome to me,’ sayd I, ‘for your sake.’ ‘Naye’ (quod he) ‘for hys owne sake, if you knewe hym; for there ys no man this daye lyuynge that can tell you of so manye strange and vnknowne peoples and contreis as this man can. And I know well that you be verye desyrous to heare of suche newes.’ ‘Than I coniected not farre a mysse’ (quod I) ‘for euen at the fyrste syghte I iudged hym to be a maryner.’ ‘Naye’ (quod he) ‘there ye were greatlye deceaued. He hayth sayled indede, not as the maryner Palynure, but as the experete and prudent prince Ulisses; yea, rather as the auncyent and sage Philosopher Plato.

‘For thys same Raphaell Hythlodaye (for thys ys hys name) is verye well lerned in the Latyne tonge; but profounde and excellent in the greke tonge, wherein he euer bestowed more studye than in the lattyne, because he had geuen hym selfe holye to the studye of Phylosophy. Wherof he knewe that there ys nothynge extante in the lattyne tonge, that is to anyy purpose, sauynge a few of Senecaes and Ciceroes doinges. His patrymonyne that he was borne vnto he lefte to his bretherne (for he is a Portugalle borne); and for the desyre that he hadde to see and knowe the farre contreys of the worlde, he joyned him selfe in companye wyth Amerike vespuce, and in the .iii. laste voyages of thes .iii., that be nowe in prynte and abrode in euerye mans handes, he contynued styll in hys companye; sauynge that in the laste voyage he came not home again wyth hym. For he made suche meanes and shyfte, what by intreataunce and what by importune sutte, that he gotte lycence of mayster Amerycke (though he were sore agaynst his will) to be one of the .xxiii. whyche in the ende of the laste voyage were lefte in the contrye of Gulike. He was therfore lefte behynde for hys mindes sake, as one that toke more thoughte and care for traувaylyng then dyinge; hauynge customablye in hys mouthe theis sayinges: He that hathe no graue ys couered wyth the skie; and, The way to heauen owte of all places is of like lengthh and distance. Which fantasye of his (if God had not bene his better frende) he hadde suerlye bought full deere.

‘But after the departynge of Mayster vespuce, when he hadde traувayled thoroughe and abowte manye contreys, with v. of his companyons Gulykyans, at the laste by maruelous chaunce he arryued in Taprobane. from whens he wente to Calyquit, where he chaunced to fynde certeyne of hys contreys shyppes, wherein he retorned again into hys countreye, nothyng lese then lokyd for.’

All thys when Peter hadde tolde me, I thankyd hym for his gentyll kyndnes, that he hadde vouchesaufed to brynge me to the speche of that man, whose communica tion he thought sholde be to me pleasaunte and acceptable. And there wyth I turned me to Raphaell; and when we hadde haylsede thone thother, and hadde spoken thies comen wordes, that be customably spoken at the fyrste metynge and acountaunce of straungers, we wente thens to my house, and there in my gardeyne, upon a benche coueryd wyth grene torues, we satte downe talking togethers.
There he tolde vs howe that, after the departynge of vespuce, he and hys fellowes, that tarryed behynde in Gulyke, beganne by lytle and lytle, thoroughge fayre and gentle speche, to winne the loue and fauour of the people of that contreye; in so muche that within shorte space, theye dydde dwell amonges them not onlye harmelese, but also occupyed wyth them verye famylyerly. He tolde vs also that they were in hyghe reputatyon and fauoure wyth a certeyne greate man (whose name and contreye ys nowe quyte owte of my remembraunce), which of hys mere lyberalytye dyd beare the costes and charges of hym and his fyue companions, and besydes that gaue them a trustye guyde, to conducte them in theyre iourney (whyche by water was in botys and by lande in wagains), and to bring them to other princes withe verye frindlye commendations.
Thus after manye dayes iourneis, he sayd they found townys and cytyes, and weale publyques full of people, gouerned by good and holsom lawes.
For vnder the lyne equynoctyall and of bothe sydes of the same, as farre as the sonne doth extend hys course, lyeth (quod he) greate and wyde desertes and wyldernesses, parched, burned and dryed vppe with continuall and intollerable heate. All thynges be hydeous, terryble, lothesome, and vnpleasaunte to be holde; all thynges owte of fasshyon and comylynes, inhabyted wyth wylyde beasts and serpentes, or at the leaste wyse wyth people that be no lesse sauage, wylde, and noysome then the verye beasts themselfes be. But a lytle farther beyonde that all thynges begyn by lytle and lytle to waxe pleasaunte; the ayre softe, temperate, and gentle; the ground couered wyth grene grasse; less wildnes in the beasts. At the laste shall ye come again to people, cities, and townes, wherin is contynuall entercourse and occupyinge of marchandyse and chaffare, not onelye amonge them selfes and wyth theyre borderers, but also wyth marchauntes of farre contreys bothe by lande and water.

‘Ther I had occasion’ (sayde he), ‘to go to manye contreys of everie syde. For there was no shyppe reddyte to anye voyage or iorney, but I and my fellowes were into it verye gladlye receauyde. The shyppes that they founde fyrste were made playne, flatte, and broade in the botome, troughewyse. The sayles were made of greate russels, or of wyckers, and in some places of lether. Afterwarde they founde shyppes wyth rydged kyeles, and sayles of canuas; yea, and shortlye after hauynge all thynges lyke owers; the shyppermen also verye experte and connynge both in the sea and in the wether.’

But he sayde that he founde greate fauour and fryndeshyppe amonge them for teachynge them the feate and vse of the lode stone, whych to them before that tym was vnknowne; and therefore they were wonte to be verye tymerous and fearefull vpon the sea, nor to venter vpon it but onlye in the somer time. But nowe they haue such a confidence in that stone, that they feare not stormy wyuter; in so doynge, ferther frome care then ieopardye. In so muche that it is greatlye to be doubtyd, lest that thynge, thoroughge theyre owne folyshe hardynes, shall tourne them to euyll and harme, whyche at the fyrste was supposyde shoule be to them good and commodyous.

But what he tolde vs that he sawe, in euerye contrey wheare he came, it were verye longe to declare. Nother it is my purpose at this time to make rehersall therof. But peraduenture in an other place, I wyll speake of yt; chyefelye suche thynes as shalbe profytable to be knowne; as in specyall be thoese decrees and ordinaunces that he marked to be well and wyselye prouyded and enacted amonge suche peoples as do lyue to gethere in a cyuyle pollycye and good ordre. For of suche thynes dyd we busilie enquyre and demaunde of hym, and he lyke wise verye wyllynglye tolde vs of the same. But as for monsters, because they be no newes, of them we were nothynge inquysitiue. For nothynge is more easye to be founde, then be barking Scyllaes, rauenyng Celenes, and Lestrygones devouerers of people, and suche lyke greate and vn-credyble monsters; but to fynde cytyzyns ruled by good and holosome lawes, that ys an excedynge rare and harde thynge.

But as he markyd manye fonde and folyshe lawes in thoose newe founde lands, so he rehersyde manye actes and constytutyons therby thies our cytyes, nations, contreys, and Kyngdomes maye take en-sample, to amende theyre faultes, enormytyes and errors; wherof in another place, as I sayde, I wyll intreate. Now at thys tyme I am determyned to reherse onlye that he tolde vs of the maners, customes, lawes, and ordinances of the vtopians. But fyrste I wyll repete our former communycatyon; by thoccasyon, and, as I myghte saye, the dryfte wherof he was browghte into the mentyon of that weale publyque. For when Raphaell hadde verye prudently touched dyuers thynges that be amysse, sume here and sume there; yea, verye manye of bothe partes; and agayne hadde spoken of suche wyse and prudent lawes and decrees as be establoshed and vsyde bothe here amonge vs and also there emonge them; as a man so connyng and experte in the lawes and customes of euery seueral countreye, as through into what place sceuer he came geaste wyse, there he had lede al his life: then Peter, much meruellyng at the man: ‘Surely mayster Raphaell’ (quod he), ‘I wondere greatlye whie you gette you not into some Kingses courte; for I am sewre there is no prynce lyuynge that wolde not be very gladde of yowe; as a man not onlye able hyghelye to delyte hym wyth youre profounde lern-ynge, and thys youre knowledge of contreys and peoples, but also are meat to instructe him with examples, and helpe hym wyth counsell. And thus doynge yowe shal bring yowre selfe in a verye good case, and also be in habilytye to helpe all youre frindes and kynsfolke.'

'As concernyng my fryndes and kynsfolke' (quod he), 'I passe not greatly for them: for I think I haue suffycyentlye done my parte towards them all readye. For thies thinges that other men doo not depart from vntyll they be olde and sicke. yea, which they be then verye lothe to leeue when they can no lenger kepe, those verye same thynges dyd I, beynge not onlye lustye and in good helth, but also in the flowere of my youthe, deuyde among my fryndes and kynsfolkes; which I think wyth thys my liberalytye owghte to holde them contentyd, and not to requyre nor to looke that besydes thys I shoulde for theyre sakes gyue my selfe in bondage to kynges.'

'Naye god forbedde' (quod peter), 'it is not my mynd that you shoulde be in bondage to kynges, but as a retay noure to them at youre pleasure; whyche sewrelye I thynke ys the nygheste waye that you can deuyse, howe to bestowe youre tyms frutefullye, not onlye for the pryuate commoditye of your fryndes and for the general proffytte of all sortes of people, but also for the auauncemente of your selfe to a muche welthier state and condytyon then you be nowe in.'

'To a welthyer condition' (quod Raphael), 'by that meanes that my mynde standethe cleane agaynst? Nowe I lyue at lybertye, after myn owne mynde and pleasure; whiche I thynke verye fewe of thes greate states and peeres of realmes can saye. Yea, and there be ynowe of them that sike for greate mens frinde-shippes; and therfore thynke it no great hurte, if they haue not me, nor .ii. or .iii. suche other as I am.'

'Well, I perceyue plainlye, frind Raphael' (quod I), 'that yowe be desierous nother of riches nor of powre. And truly I haue in no lesse reuereence and estimacyon a man that is of your mind, then anyy of them al that be so high in pour and auctoritie. But you shall doo as it becommith yow, yea, and accordinge to this wisedome and thys highe and free couraghe of youres, yf yowe can fynde in youre harte so to appoynte and dyspose your selfe, that you maie apply your wytte and delygence to the proffyt of the weale publyque, though it be sume what to youre owne payne and hyndraunce. And thys shall yow neuer so well doo, nor wyth so greate proffitte perfourme, as yf yowe be of sum great prynces councell, and put into his heade (as I doubte not but you wyll) honeste opynyons, and vertuous persuasyonys. For from the prync, as from a perpetuall well sprynge, cummythe amonge the people the floode of all that is good or euell. But in yowe is so perfitte lernynge, that wythowte anye experience; and agayne so greate experyence, that wythoute anye lernynge; yowe maye well be anny kinges councellour.'

'Yow be twyse deceaued, maister More' (quod he), 'fyrste in me, and agayne in the thing it selfe. For nother is in me that habilite ythat yowe force vpon me; and yf it were neuer so muche, yet in dysqueting myne owne quietnes I should nothing further the weale publique. For, fyrst of all, the moste parte of all princes haue more delyte in warlike matters and feates of cheualrie (the knowleage wherof I nother haue nor desire), than in the good feates of peace; and employe muche more study howe by right or by wrong to enlarge their dominions, than howe well and peaceablie to rule and gouerne that they haue all redie. Moreouer, they that be counsellours to kinges, every one of them eyther is of him selfe so wysse in dede, that he nede not, or elles he thinketh him self so wise, that he will not allowe an other mans counsell; sauing that they do shamefully and flatteringly geue assent to the fond and folishe sayinges of certeyn greate men, whose fauours, bicause they be in high aucthoritie with their prince, by assentacion and flattering they labor to opteyne. And verily it is naturally geuen to all men to esteame their owne inuentyons best. So both the rauen and the ape thincke their owne yong ones fayrest.

‘Than if a man in such a company, where some disdayne and haue despite at other mens inuentions; 5 and some cownte their owne best; if among suche men, I saye, a man shoulde bringe furth any thinge that he hayth redde done in tymes paste, or that he hathe sene done in other places, there the hearers fare as though the hole existimacion of theyr wisdome 10 were in jeopardy to be ouerthrown, and that ever after they should be counted for very diserdes, onles they colde in other mens inuentions pycke out matter to reprehende and find fau. If all other pore helpes faile, then this is their extreame refuge: “Thies 15 thinges” (say they) “pleased oure forefathers and auncetours: wolde god wee coulde be so wise as they were.” And as though they had wittely concluded the matter, and with this answere stoppid euery mans mouthe, they sitt downe agayn. As who should saye 20 it were a very daungerous matter, if a man in any pointe should be founde wiser then his forefathers were. And yet be we content to suffer the best and wittiest of their decrees to lye vnexecuted; but if in any thinge a better ordre mighte haue bene taken, 25 than by them was, theare we take faste holde, and finde many fau. Many times haue I chaunced vpon suche prowde, lewde, ouerthwart, and waywarde Judgementes; yea, and ones in Englande.’

‘I praye yow, Syr’ (quod I), ‘haue yow bene in 30 owr contrey?’ ‘Yea forsothe’ (quod he), ‘and their I tarried for the space of iiiii. or v. monythes together, not longe after the insurreccion, that the western Englishe men made agaynst their kynge; whych by their owne myserable and pitefull slaughter was sup 35 pressed and endyd. In the meane season I was much bounde and beholden to the righte reuerende father Jhon Morton. Archebishop, and cardenall of Canterburye, and at that tyme also Lord chauncellour of England; a man, maister Peter (for maister More knoweth all redy that I wyll saye), not more honorable for his authority, then for his prudence and vertue. He was of a meane stature, and though streken in age yet bare he his body vpryght. In his face did shine such an amiable reuerence, as was pleasurente to beholde. Gentell in communycatyon, yet earneste and sage. He had greate deleyt manye tymes wyth roughe speche to hys sewters to proue, but wythowte harme, what prompte wytte and what bolde sprite were in eucry man. In the which, as in a vertue much agreinge with his nature, so that there-wyth were not ioyned impudency, he toke greate delectatyon; and the same person, as apte and mete to haue an administratyon in the weale publique, he dyd louingly embrace. In hys speche he was fyne, eloquent, and pythye. In the lawe he had profounde knowledge; in witte he was incomparable; and in memory wonderfull excellent. Thies qualytyes, whych in hym were by nature synguler, he by learnynge and vse had made perfytte.

'The Kynge putt muche truste in hys councell: the weale publyque also in a maner leaned vnto hym, when I was there. For euyn in the chiefe of hys youth he was taken from schole into the Courte, and there passyd all hys tyme in muche trouble and busynes, and was contynually tumbled and tossed in the waues of dyuers mysfortunes and aduersytyes. And so by many and greate daungers he lerned the experience of the worlcle, whyche so beynge learned can not easely be forgotten.

'It chaunced on a certayne daye, when I sate at hys table, there was also a certayne laye man, cunnynge in the lawes of youre Realme. Whyche, I can not tel wherof takyng occasyon, began dyligently and busily to prayse that strayte and rygorous iustice, which at that tyme was there executed upon fellones, who, as he sayde, were for the moste part. xx. hanged together upon one gallowes. And, seyng so fewe escapyd punyshement, he sayd he coulde not chewse but greatly wonder and maruell, howe and by what euill lucke it should so cum to passe, that theues neuertheles were in every place so ryffe and ranke. “Naye, Syr,” quod I (for I durst boldely speake my mind before the Cardynall), “maruell nothing herat; for thys punyshement of theues passeth the limites (of) Justyce, and is also very hurteful to the weale publyque. For it is to extreame and crewell a punishe10 ment for thefte, and yet not sufficient to refrayne men from thefte. For simple thefte is not so greate an offence, that it owght to be punished with death. Nother there is any punishmente so horrible, that it can kepe them from stealynge whych haue no other crafte wherby to get their liuing. Therefore in this poynete, not yow only, but also the moste part of the worlde, be lyke euyll scholemasters, whych be readyare to beate then to teache their scholers. For great and horryble punyshementes be appoynted for theues; 20 whereas muche rather prouysyon should haue bene made, that there were some meanes wherby they might gett theyr lyuynge, so that no man should be dreuen to thys extreame necessitie, fyrst to steale, and then to dye.” “Yes” (quod he), “this matter is well ynoughe prouyded for all ready. There be handye craftes, there is husbandry, to gett their liuynge by, if they wolde not wyllingly be nowght.” “Nay” (quod I), “you shall not skape so; for, fyrste of all, I wyll speake nothyng of them that come home owte of warre maymede and lame, as not longe ago owte of blacke heath filde, and a lityll before that owt of the warres in Fraunce: suche (I say) as put their lyues in iepardy for the weale publique or the kinges sake, and by the reason of weakenes and lamenes be not able 35 to occupy their olde craftes, and be to aged to lerne newe: of them I wyll speake nothinge, because warre lyke the tyde ebbeth and floweth. But let vs consyder those thinges that chaunce dayly before our eyes.

"Fyrste, there is a great number of gentilmens, which can not be content to lyue ydle them selfes, like dorres, of that whiche other haue laboryd for: their tenauntes I meane, whom they polle and shawe to the quycke by reysing their rentes (for this only poynte of frugalitye do they vse, men els thoroughge their lauasse and prodigall spendynge able to bringe them selfes to very beggery): thies gentilmens (I say) do not only liue in ydilnes them selfes, but also carry about with them at their tayles a greate flocke or trayne of ydell and loytrynge seruynge men, whyche neuer learned any crafte wherby to get their liuings. Thies men, as sone as theyr mayster is dead, or be sicke them selfes, be incontinent thruste owte of doores. For gentlemen had rather kepe ydil persones then sycke men; and many times the dead mans heyr is not able to mainteyne so great a howse, and kepe so many seruyinge men, as his father dydde. Then in the meane season they that be thus destytute of seruice other starue for honger, or manfully playe the theaues. For what wolde yow haue them to do? When they haue wandred abrode so longe, untyll they haue worne threde bare their apparell, and also appayred their health, then gentlemen, because of their pale and sicke faces and patched cotes, wyll not take them into seruyce. And husbandmen dare not sett them a worke, knowyng well ynowng that he is nothyng mete to doo trewe and faythfull seruice to a poore man wyth a spade and a mattoke, for small wages and harde fare, whyche, beynge deyntely and tenderly pampered vp in ydilnes and pleasure, was wont with a sworde and a buckeler by hys syde to iette through the strete with a bragging looke, and to thynke hym selfe to good to be any mans mate."

"Naye by saynt Marie, ser" (quod the lawier) "not so, for this kinde of men muste we make most of. For in them, as men of stowter stomaches, bolder spyrytes, and manlyer currages, then handy craftes men and plowe men be, doth consyste the hole powre, strengthe, and puisaunce of oure hoste, when we muste fight in battaill."

""Forsote, ser, aswel yowe myghte saye" (quod I) "that for warres sake you must cheryshe theues. For sewerly yow shal neuer lacke theues whyles yowe haue them. No, nor theues be not the most false and faynt harted soldiers, nor souldiours be not the cowardliste theues: so well thees .ii. craftes agree together. But this fawte, though it be mueche vsed among yow, yet is it not peculiar to yow only, but commen also almost to all natyons. Yet Fraunce, besydes thys, is troubled and infected wyth a mueche sorer plage. The hole realme is fylled and besieged wyth hierede soldiours in peace tyme, yf that be peace whyche be brought in under the same coloure and pretence, that haith persuaded yow to kype thies ydell seruynge men. For thies wisfooles and very archedoltes thought the wealth of the hole contrey herin to consist, yf there were euer in a readynes a stronge and a sewer garrison, specyallye of olde practysed soldyours; for they put no truste at all in men vnexercysed. And therfore they must be fayne to seke for warre, to thende they maye euer haue practysed soldyours and cunnynge mansleers; leaste that (as it is pretilie sayde of Saluste) their handes and their myndes thoroughge ydylnes or lacke of exercyse shoulde waxe dull.

""But howe pernycyous and pestylente a thynge it is to maynteyne suche beastes, the Frenche men by there owne harmes haue learned; and the examples of the Romaynes, Carthaginiens, Siriens and of many other contreyes, do manyfestly declare. For not only the empire, but also the fieldys and cityes of all thies, by diuers occasyons haue bene ouerrunned and destroyed of their owne armies before hand had in a reddines.
Now how vnecessary a thynge thys is, hereby it maye appere: that the Frenche souldiours, whyche from their youthe haue byne practysed and inured in feates of armes, doo not cracke nor aunauce them selfes to haue verye often gotte the vpper-hande and masterye of your newe made and vnpractysed souldiours. But in thys poynete I wyll not vse manye wordes, leaste perchaunce I maye seme to natter yow. No nor those same handy craft men of yours in cities, nor yet the rude and vplandishe ploughemen of the contrey, are not supposed to be greatly affraid of your gentilmens ydill seruing men, onles it be suche as be not of body or stature correspondent to theyr strenghte and currage; orels whose bolde stomackes be dyscourraged thoroughge pouertye. Thus yowe maye see, that yt ys not to be feared leaste they shoulde be effemynatede yf they were broughte vppe in good craftes and laborsome wourkes, whereby to gett theyre lyuynge; whose stowte and sturdye bodyes (for gentlemen vouchesauffe to corrupte and spill none but picked and chosen men) nowe, other by reason of rest and ydilnes, be brought to weaknesses, orels by to easy and womanlye exercises be made feble and vnable to endure hardenes. Trewly howe soeuer the case stondeth, thys me thinketh is nothyng avayleable to the weale publique, for warre sacke, whyche yowe neuer haue but when yow wyll your selfes, to kepe and mainteyn an vnnumerable flocke of that sort of men, that be so troblesome and noyous in peace; wherof yow owght to haue a thowsande times more regard then of warre.

“But yet this is not onlye the necessary cause of stealing. There is an other which as I suppose is proper and peculiare to yow English men alone.”

“What is that?” quod the Cardenall. “Forsoth” (quod I), “your shepe, that were wont to be so smal eaters, now, as I heare saie, be become so greate deuowerers, and so wylde, that they eate vp and swallow down the very men them selfes. They consume, destroy, and devour hole fieldes, howses, and cities. For looke in what partes of the realme doth growe the fynyst, and threfore dearist woll, there noble men and gentlemen, yea, and certeyn Abbottes, holy men god wote, not contenting them selfes with the yearely receuennues and profyttes that were wont to grow to theyr forefathers and predecessours of their landes, nor beyng content that they liue in rest and pleasure, nothyng profytyng, ye, muche noyinge the weale publique, leave no grounde for tyllage; they enclose all in pastures; they throw downe houses; they placke downe townes; and leave nothing stondyng but only the churche, to make of it a shepehowse. And, as though yow loste no small quantity of grounde by forestes, chases, laundes, and parkes; those good holy men turne all dwellinge places and all glebelande into desolation and wildeernes.

"Therfore, that one coetous and vnsatiable cor- maraunte and verye plage of his natyue contrye may compasse abowte and inclose many thousand acres of grounde to gether within one pale or hedge, the husbandmen be thrust owte of their owne; or else other by coueyne or fraude, or by vyolent oppression, they be put-besydes it, or by wronges and injuries they be so weried that they be compelled to sell all. By one meanes therfore or by other, other by howke or crooke, they must nedes departe awaye, pore, sylie, wretched soules; men, women, husbandes, wyues, fatherles children, widdowes, wofull mothers with their yonge babes, and their hole housholde smal in substaunce, and much in nombre, as husbandrie requireth many handes. Awaye they trudge, I say, out of their knowne and accustomed howses, fyndyng no places to rest in. All their housholde stuffe, whiche is verye lytle worth, though it myght well abyde the sale, yet beyng sodeynelye thrust out, they be con- stratyned to sell it for a thyng of nought. And when they haue, wanderynge about, sone spent that, what can they els do but steale, and then iustelye, God wote, behanged, or els go about a beggyng? And yet then also they be cast in prison as vagaboundes, because they go about and worke not; whom no man will set a worke, though they neuer so willingly offer them selves thereto. For one shepherde or heard man is ynough to eate vp that grounde with cattel, to the occupying wherof about husbandrye many handes were requysyte.

"And this is also the cause that victualles be nowe in many places dearer. Yea, bysydes this the pryce of wolle is so rysen that poore folkes, whiche were wont to worke it and make cloth of it, be nowe able to bye none at all. And by thys means ye manye be fayne to forsake worke, and to gyue them selves to ydelves. For after that so muche grounde was inclosed for pasture, an infinite multitude of shepe died of the rotte, suche vengaunce God toke of their inordinate and vsnaciable couetuousnes, sendyng amonge the shepe that pestiferous morreyn, which much more iustely should haue fallen on the shepemasters owne heades. And though the numbre of shepe increase neuer so fast, yet the pryce falleth not one myte, because there be so fewe sellers. For they be almoste all commen into a fewe riche mens handes, whome no neade driueth to sell before they lust; and they luste not before they may sell as deare as they lust. Now the same cause bryngeth in licker dearth of the other kindes of cattell; yea, and that so muche the more, bycause that after farmes pluckyd downe, and husbandrye decayed, ther is no man that passyth for the breadyng of yonge stoore. For thees ryche men brynge not vp the yonge ones of great cattell as they do lambes. But first they bye them abrode very chepe, and afterward, when they be fattede in their pastures, they sell them agayne excedyng deare. And therfor (as I suppose) the hole incommoditie herof is not yet felte. For yet they make dearth only in those places where they sell. But when they shall fetche them awaye from thens wheare they be bredde, faster then they can be brought vp, then shall there also be fetche great dearth, when stoore begynnith to fayle their whear the ware ys bought.

"Thus the unreasonable couetousnes of a fewe hath turned that thyng to the utter vndoyng of your Ilande, in the whiche thyng the chiefe felicitie of your realme dyd consist. For this great dearth of victualles causeth euery man to kepe as lytle houses and as small hospitalitie as he possible maye, and to put awaye their seruauntes: whether, I praye you, but a beggynge? or els, whiche thies gentle bloodis and stoute stomakes wyll soner set theyr myndes vnto, a stealinge?

"Nowe, to amende the matters, to this wretched beggerye and myserable pouertie is ioyned great wantonnes, importunate superfluytie, and excessiue ryote. For not only gentle mens seruauntes, but also handy craft men, yea, and almoste the ploughemen of the countrey, with all other sortes of people, vse mueh straunge and prowde newe fanglenes in their apparrrell, and to mueh prodigal riotte and sumptuous fare at their table. Nowe bawdes, qweynes, hoores, harlottes, strumpettes, brothelhouses, stews, and yet an other stews, wine tauernes, ale houses, and tipling houses, with so many noughty lewde and vnlawfull games, as dice, cardes, tables tennyes, bolles, coytes, do not al thyss sende the haunters of them streygght a stealynghe when theyr money is gone?

"Caste out thies pernycious abomynacyons; make a lawe that they whyche plucked downe fermes and townes of husbandrye, shall buylde them vp agayne or els yelde and vpreternder the possessyon of them to suche as wyll goo to the coste of buyldynge them anewe. Suffer not thies ryche men to bye vp all, to ingrosse and forstalle, and with theyr monopolye to kepe the market alone as please them. Let not so manye be brought vp in ydlenes; lett husbandrye and tyllage be restored agayne; let clothe workyng be renewed; that there maye be honest labours for thys ydell sorte to passe theyre tyme in profytablye, whych hytherto other pouertye hathe caused to be theues, or elles nowe be other vagabondes, or ydell seruynge men, and shortelye wylbe theues. Dowteles, oneles yowe fynde a remeedye for thyes enormytyes, yowe shall in vayne auuance your selfes of executinge iustice vpon fellones. For this iustice is more beautyfull then iuste or profytayle. For by sufferynge your youthe wantonlye and viciouslye to be brought vp, and to be infected euyn from theyr tender age by lytle and lytle wyth vyce; than a goddes name to be punyshed, when they commytte the same faultes after they be commen to mannes state, whiche frome ther youthe they were euery lyke to doo: in thys pointe, I praye yowe, what other thynge doo yowe, then make theues, and then punyshe them?"

‘Nowe as I was thus speakyng, the Lawier beganne to make hym selfe readye to aunswere, and was determyned wyth hym selfe to vse the common fassyon and trade of disputers, whyche be more dylygent in rehersynge then aunsweryng, as thynking the memorye worthye of thechiefe prayse. “In dede syr” (quod he) yow haue sayd well, beinge but a straunger, and one that myght rather here somme thynge of thyes matters, then haue anye exacte or perfecte knowledge of the same, as I will incontinent by open proffe make manifest and playn. For firste I wyll reherse in ordre all that yow haue sayde; then I wyll declare in what thynge yowe be deceaued, through lacke of knowledge, in all our fassions, maners and customes;
and laste of all I wyll aunswere to your argumentes, and confute them euery one. Fyrste thefore I wyll begynne where I promysed. Foure thynges yowe semed to me”—“Hold your peace” (quod the Cardynall), “for by lyke yowe wyll make no shorte aunswere, whiche make such a beginnyng; wherfore at thys tyme yowe shall not take the paynes to make youre aunswere, but kepe it to youre neste meatynge, whiche I would be ryght gladde that it myght be euen to morrowe neste (onles other yowe or mayster 5 Raphaell haue any earnest lette).

"But now, maister Raphaell, I woulde very gladly heare of yow, whie yow thynke thefte not worthy to be punished with death: or what other punyshment yow can deuyse more expedient to the weale publique. For I am sewer yowe are not of that mynde, that yowe woulde haue thefte escape vnpunyshed. For if now the extreme punishment of death cannot cause them to leaue stealynge, then if ruffians and rubbers shoulde be sewer of their lyues, what violence, what feare were able to holde their handes from robbynge, whiche would take the mitigacion of the punishment as a verye peruocation to the mischiese?"

"Suerly my lorde" (quod I) "I thynke it no right nor iustice that the losse of money should cause the losse of mans lyfe. For myne opinion is that all the goodes in the worlde are not able to counteruayle mans lyfe. But if they wold thus say: that the breaking of iustice, and the transgression of the lawes is recompensed with this punishment, and not the losse of the money; then why maye not thys extreme iustice wel be called extreme iniurie? For neither so cruel gouernaunce, so streyte rules, and vnmercyfull lawes be allowable, that if a small offence be commytted, by and by the sworde shoulde be drawen; nor so stoycall ordinaunces are to be borne wythall, as to counte all offences of suche equalitie, that the kyllynge of a man, or the takynge of hys money from hym, were bothe a matter; and the one no more heynous offence then the other: betwene the whyche two, yf we haue annye respecte to equitie, no symylytude or equalytie consysteth. God commaundeth vs that we shall not kyll. And be we then so hastie to kyll a man for takynge a lytle money? And yf annye man woulde vnderstande kylyngge, by this commaundement of GOD, to bee forbydden after no larger wyse then mans constituicions defyneth kylyngge to be lawfull, then whye maye it not lykewyse, by mannes 5 constitutions, be determyned after what sorte hoore-dome, fornication, and periurye maye be lawfull? For where as by the permission of GOD no man hatho power to kyll nother hym selfe, nor yet annye other man; then yf a lawe made by the consehte of men concernynge slaughter of men oughte to be of suche strengthe, force, and vertue, that they whyche contrarye to the commaundement of GOD haue kylled those, whome thys constitucion of man commanded to be kyllled, be cleane quyte and exempte owte of the 15 bondes and daunger of Goddes commaundemente; shall it not then by thys reason followe that the powre of Goddes commaundement shall extende no further then mannes lawe dothe defyne and permytte? And so shall it come to passe, that in lyke manner mans constitucions in al thynges shal determynye howe farre the obseruation of all Goddes commaundementes shall extende. To be shorte, Moyses lawe, thoughe it were vngentle and sharpe, as a lawe that was gyuen to bondmen; yea, and them verye obstinate, stubborne, and styf necked; yet it punnyshed thefte by the purse, and not wyth deathe. And let vs not thynke that GOD in the newe lawe of clemencie and mercie, vnder the whiche he ruleth vs with fatherlie gentlenesse, as his dere chyldren, hath geuen vs greater scoupe and license to execute crueltie one vpon an other.

"Now ye haue hard the reasons, whereby I am persuwad that this punishment is vnlawfull. Furthermore I thynke there is no body that knoweth not, how vnreasonable, yea how pernitious a thyngge it is to 25 the weale publique, that a thefe, and a homicide or morderer, shuld suffer equall and lyke punyshment. For the thefe, soing that man that is condemped for thefte in no lesse ieoperdie, nor iudged to no lesse punishment, then hym that is conviukt of manslaughter; through thyss cogitation onlye he is stronglye and forcyblye prouoked, and in a maner constreyned, to kyl him, whom els he would haue but robbed. For, the 5 murder ones done, he is in lesse care, and in more hope that the dede shall not be bewrayed or knownen, seynge the partye is now deade and rydde out of the waye, whyche onely myght haue vttered and disclosed it. But if he chaunce to be taken and discriued, yet he is in no more daunger and ieopardie then yf he had commyttted but single fellonye. Therfore whyles we goo about wyth suche crueltye to make theues aferd, we prouoke them to kyll good men.

"Now as touchyng this question, what punysshe-15 mente were more commodyous and better; that trulye in my judgement is easyer to be founde, than what punysshement were worse. For whie should we dowt that to be a good and a profytable waye for the punysshemente of offendours, whyche we knowe dydde in tymes paste so longe please the Romaynes; men in thadmynystratyon of a weale publyque moste experte, polytyque, and cunning? Such as amonge them weare conuycte of great and heynous trespaces, them they condempned into ston quarris, and in to myenes to dygge mettalle, there to be kepte in cheynes all the dayes of theyr lyfe.

"But as concernyng this matter, I allow the ordenaunce of no nation so well as that I sawe (whyles I trauayled a brode abowt the wordle) vsed in Persia, amonge the people that commenlye be called the polylerytes; whose lande is bothe large and ample, and also well and wyttelye gouerned; and the people in all conditions free and ruled by their owne lawes, sauing that they paye a yerely tribute to the great king of Persia. But bicause they be farre from the sea, compassed and closed in almoste rounde abowte wyth hygh mountaynes, and do content them selfes wyth the frutes of theyr owne lande, whyche is of yt selve verye fertyle and frutefull: for thys cause nother they goo to other cowntreys, nor other comme to them. And accordyng to the olde custome of the lande, they desyre not to enlarge the bowndes of theyr domynyons; and those that they haue by reason of the hyghe hylles be easelye defended; and the trybute whyche they paye to their chiefe lord and kinge setethe them quyete and free from warfare. Thus theyre lyffe ys commodyous rather then gallawnte, and maye better be callede happye or luckye, then notable or famous. For they be not knowne as muche as by name, I suppose, sauynge onlye to theyr nexte neyghbours and borderours.

"They that in thys lande be attayntede and con-uycte of felonye, make restitutyon of that they stoole to the ryghte owner; and not (as they doo in other landes) to the Kynge; whome they thynke to haue no more ryghte to the thefe stolen thynge than the thieffe himselfe hath. But if the thynge be loste or made awaye, then the value of yt is paide of the goodes of such offendours, whyche elles remayneth all hole to theire wyffes and chyldrene. And they them selfes be condempned to be common laborers; and, onles the thefte be verye heynous, they be nother locked in pryson, nor fettered in gyues, but be vntyed and goo at large, laborynge in the common workes. They that refuse labour, or goo slowly and slacy to there woorke, be not only tied in cheynes, but also pricked forward with stripes. They that be diligent about their woorke liue without checke or rebuke. Euery nyghte they be called in by name, and be locked in theyr chambers. Besyde their dayly labour, their lyffe is nothyng harde or incommodyous. Their fare is indyfferent good, borne at the chardeg of the weale publyque, bycause they be commen seruauntes to the commen wealth. But their charges in all places of the lande is not borne a lyke. For in some partes that is bestowed upon them is gathered of almes. And though that waye be vncerteyn, yet the people be so full of mercye and pytie, that none is fownde more profytable or plentyfull. In some places certeyn landis be appoynted here vnto; of the reuenuwes wherof they be mainteined. And in some places every man geuyth a certeyne trybute for the same vse and purpose. Agayne in some partes of the lande thies seruyng men (for so be thies damned persons called), do no common worke; but, as every private man nedeth laborours, so he cometh into the markette place, and there hiereth some of them for meat and drynke, and a certeyne limityd wayges by the daye, sumwhat cheper then he shoulde hire a free man. It is also lawfull for them to chastyce the slowth of thies seruyng men wyth strypes. "By thys meanes they neuer lacke woorke; and besydes their meat and dryncke every one of them bryngeth dayly sum thynge into the common treasouiy. All and every one of them be apparrayled in one colour. Their heddys be not polled or shauen, but rownded a lytle aboue the eeres; and the typpe of the one eare is cut of. Every one of them may take meat and drincke of their frindes, and also a cote of their owne collour; but to receyve monye is death, as well to the geuer as to the receyuour. And no lesse ieopardie it is for a free man to receyue moneye of a seruyng man, for any manner of cause; and lykwyse for seruyng men to touche weapons. The seruyng men of every seuerall shyere be dystyncte and knownen from other by their seuerall and dystyncte badges; whyche to caste away is death: as it is also to be seene owte of the precyncte of their owne sheire, or to talke wyth a seruyng man of another shyere. And it is no lesse daunger to them for to intende to runne awaye, then to do yt in dede. Yea, and to concele suche an enterpryse in a seruyng man yt is death; in a free man seruytude. Of the contrarye parte, to hym that openeth and uttereth suche counsellles be decreyde large giftes: to a free man a great somme of moneye; to a seruynga man freedome; and to them bothe forgeuynes and pardone of that they were of counsell in that pretence. So that 5 yt can neuer be so good for them to goo forwarde in thyre euyll purpose, as by repentaunce to turne backe.

"Thys is the lawe and ordre in thys behalfe, as I haue shewed yow. Wherin what humanyte is vseede, howe farre yt is frome crueltye, and howe commodyous yt is, yow doo playnlye perceue: for asmuche as the ende of their wrath and punyshe-mente intende that nothyng elles but the distructyon of vyces and sauynge of men; wyth so vsynge and orderynge them, that theye can not chuse but be good; and what harme so euer theye dyd before, in the resydewe of thyre lyffe to make amendys for the same.

"Moreouer yt is so lytle feared, that they shoulde torne agayne to theyre vcyous condytyons, that waye-farynge men wyll for theyre sauegarde chuse them to theyre guydes before anynge other, in euerye theyre chaungynge and takynge newe. For yt they wolde commytte robberye, theye haue nothyng abowte them meate for that purpose. They maye towche no weapons: moneye fownde abowte them shoulde betraye the robberye. They shoulde be no soner taken wyth the maner, but furthwyth they shoulde be punysshed. Nother theye can haue anynge hoope at all to skape awaye by flyenge. For howe shoulde a man, that in no parte of hys apparrell is lyke other men, flye preuelye and vnknowen, oneles he wolde runne awaye naked? Howe be yt, so also flyinge, he shoulde be dyscryued by hys rounding and his eare marke. But yt is a thynge to be dowted, that they will lay their heddes togither, and conspire agaynst the weale pub-lyque. No, no, I warraunte you. For the seruyng men of one shere alone could neuer hoope to brynge to passe suche an enterpryse, wythowte sollycytynge, entysynge, and allurynge the seruynge men of many other shyeres to take their partes. Whych thynge is to them so impossyble, that they may not asmuche as 5 speake or talke togethers, or salute one an other. No, it is not to be thought that they wold make their owne countrey men and companyons of their cowsnsell in such a matter, whych they knowe well shoulde be ieopardye to the conceolour therof, and greate com-modytye and goodnes to the openner of the same:
where as on the other parte, ther is none of them al hoopeles or in dyspayre to recouer agayne hys freed-dome, by humble obedience, by pacyent suffrynge, and by geauynge good tokens and lyklyhode of hymself, that he wyll euer after that liue lyke a trewe and an honeste man. For every yeare dyuers be restoryd agayne to their freedome, through the commendatyon of their patience."

'When I had thus spoken, saynge moreouer that 20
I coulde see no cause whie this ordre might not be had in England, with much more proffyte then the Justyce which the lawier so highly praised: "Naye" (quod the lawier), "this could neuer be so stablished in England, but that it must neades bringe the weale publique into great ieopardie and hasarde." And as he was thus saying, he shaked his heade, and made a wrie mouth, and so held his peace. And all that were ther present, with one assent agreid to his saying.

"'Well" (quod the Cardinall), "yet it were hard to 30 judge withowte a profye whether this order wold doo well here or no. But when the sentence of deathe is guen, if than the king should commaunde execution to be differryd and spared, and wold proue this order and passion; taking away the priuileges of all saintuaries; if then the profye wold declare the thing to be good and profitable, than it were well done that it were stablisshed. Els the condemnpned and reprimed parsons may aswell and as jystly be put to death after this prose, as when they were first cast. Nother any ioperdye can in the meane space growe here of. Yea, and me thinketh that thies vagaboundes may very well be ordered after the same fassion, against whome we haue hitherto made so many lawes, and so litle preuailed."

‘When the Cardinal had thus said, than euery man gaue greate praise to my sayinges, which a litle before they had disallowed. But most of all was estemed that which was spoken of vagaboundes, bicause it was the cardinalles owne addition.

‘I can not tell whether it were best to reherse the communication that followed, for it was not very sad. But yet you shal here it: for ther was ne euell in it; 15 and partly it parteined to the matter before said.

‘Ther chaunsed to stond by a certein iesting parasite, or scoffer, which wold seme to resemble and countefeit the foole. But he did in such wise counterfeyt, that he was almost the very same in dead that he 20 labored to represent. He so studied with wordes and saynges, brought furth so out of time and place, to make sporte and moue laughter, that he himself was oftener laughed at then his iestes were. Yet the foolish fellow brought out now and then such in-25 different and reasonable stuffe, that he made the prouerbe trew, which sayeth: he that shoteth oft, at the last shal hit the marke. So that when one of the company said that thorough my communication a good ordre was found for theues, and that the Cardinall also had wel prouided for vagaboundes; so that only remained some good prouision to be made for them that through siknes and age were fallen into pouerty, and were become so impotente and vnweldye, that they were not able to woorke for their liuing: “Tush” (quod he) “let me alon with them; you shall see me do well ynough with them. For I had rather then anye good that this kind of people were dreuen sum-whether out of my sighte: they haue so sore troubled me many times and oft, when they haue with their lamentable teares begged money of me; and yet thei could neuer to mi mind so tune theire song, that therby they euery got of me one farthynge. For euery more the one of thies two chaunced: eyther that I wolde not, or elles that I could not, bicause I had it not. Therefore nowe they be waxed wyse. When they see me goo bye, bycause they wyll not leesse thei raborue, they lette me go, and saye not one worde to me. So they looke for nothing of me; no, in good sothe, no more then if I were a priest. But I will make a law, that all thies beggers shalbe distribute and bestowed into houses of religion. The men shalbe made laye bretherne, as they call them, and the women nunnes.” Here at the Cardenall smiled, and allowed it in iest; yea, and all the residue in good earnest.

‘But a cerceyne freare, graduate in diuinitie, toke such pleasur and delite in this ieste of priestes and monkes, that he also, being elles a man of grislye and sterne grauitye, beganne merilye and wantonlye to ieste and taunt. “Nay” (quod he), “you shal not so be ridde and dispatched of beggers, oneles you make some prouision also for us frears.” “Whie” (quod the iester) “that is doon all redy. For mi lord him selfe set a very good ordre for yow, when he decreed that vagaboundes should be kept strayt, and set to worke; for yow be the greatest and veriest vagaboundes that be.”

‘This iest also, when they saw the Cardinal not disproue it, euery man tooke it gladly, sauing only the Frear. For he (and that no marueil) when he was thus towchyd one the quicke, and hit on the gawl, so fret, so fumed and chafid at it, and was in such a rage, that he could not refrayn himselfe from chiding, skolding, railing, and reuiling. He called the fellow ribbald, villayn, iauell, backbiter, sclaun-derer, and the sonne of perdition; citing therwith terrible threatening out of holy scriptur. Then the jesting skoffer began to play the scoffer indeede, and verily he was good at yt, for he could play a part in that play, no man better. "Patient iyourself, good maister Freare" (quod he), "and be not angry; for scripture saith: in your patience you shal saue your soules." Then the Freare (for I wil rehearse his oune very woordes): "No, gallous wretche, I am not angry" (quod he); "or at the leaste wise I do not synne: for the psalmiste saith, be you angry and sinne not."

'Then the Cardinal spake gently to the Freare, and desiered him to quyete hymself. "No, my lord" (quod he), "I speake not but of a good zeal as I ought; for holly men had a good zeale. Wherfor it is said; the zeale of thy house hath eaten me. And it is song in the church: The skorners of Helizeus, whiles he went vp into the house of god, felt the scale of the bald; as peraduentur this skorning villain ribauld shal feel." "You do it" (quod the cardinall) "perchaunce of a good mind and affection. But me thinketh you should do, I can not tel whether more holily, certes more wisely, if you wold not set your wit to a fooles witte, and with a foole take in hand a foolish contention." "No, forsoeth, my lorde" (quod he), "I should not doo more wiselye. For Salomon the wise sayeth: Answer a foole according to his folishnes; like as I do now, and do shew him the pit that he shall fall into, if he take not hede. For if many skorners of Helizeus, which was but one bald man, felt the zeal of the balde, howe much more shall one skorner of many frears feele, amonge whom be many bald men? And we haue also the popes bulles, wherby all that mock and skorne us be excommunicate, suspended, and acursed." The cardinal seing that none end wold be made, sent away the iester by a preuy beck, and turned the communication to an other matter. Shortly after, when he was risen from the table, he went to heare his sueters, and so dimissed vs.
‘Loke, maister More, with how long and tedious a tale I haue kept you, which suerly I wolde haue bene ashamed to haue done, but that you so earnestly desiered me, and did after suche a sort geue eare vnto hit, as though you wolde not that any parcell of that communication should be left out; which though I haue doone sumwhat briefely, yet coulde I not chuse but rehearse it, for the judgement of them, which, when they had improued and disallowed my sayinges, yet incontinent hearinge the Cardinall allowe them, dyd themselfes also approue the same; so impudentl[y] flattering him, that they were nothinge ashamed to admit, yea, almost in good earnest, his iesters foolish inventions; bicause that he him selfe, by smylynge at them, did seme not to disprove them. So that hereby you may right well perceave, how litle the courtiers wold regard and esteme me and my sayinges.’

‘I ensure you, maister Raphael’ (quod I), ‘I toke great delectation in hearing you: all things that yow sayde were spoken so wittily and so pleasautly. And me thought my self to be in the meane time not only at home in my countrey, but also, throughe the pleasaut remembraunce of the Cardinall, in whose housse I was brought vp of a child, to waxe a childe agayne. And, frend Raphael, though I did beare verye greate loue towardes you before, yet seynge yow do so earnestly fauour thys man, yow wyll not beleue howe muche my loue towardes yow is nowe increased. But yet, all this notwithstanding, I can by no meanes chaunge my mind, but that I must needys beleue that you, if you be disposed, and can find in youre harte to followe some prynces courte, shall with your good counselves greatly healpe and further the commen wealth. Wherefore there is nothynge more apperteynyng to your dewty; that is to say, to the dewty of a good man. For where as youre Plato Judgethe that weale publyques shall by this meanes attayne perfecte felicitie, other if phylosophers be kynges, or els if kynges giue them selfes to the study of Philo-sophie; how farre, I praye yowe, shall commen wealthes then be from thys felicitie, if phylosophers wyll
(not) vouchesaufe to instructe kynges with their good counsell? ’ ‘They be not so vnkind’ (quod he), ‘but 5 they would gladlye do it; yea, manye haue done it all readie in bookes that they haue put furth, if kynges and princes would be wylylyng and readie to folowe good counsell. But Plato doubtles dyd well forsee, oneles kynges themselfes would applye their myndes 10 to the studye of philosophie, that elles they would neuer thoroughlye allowe the counsell of philosophers; beyng themselfes before euen from their tender age infectyd and corrupt with peruerse and euyll opinions.
Whiche thynge Plato hymselfe prouyd trewe in kyng 15
Dionise. If I should propose to any kyngge holsome decrees, doinge my endeuour to pluck out of hys mynde the pernitious originall causes of vice and noughtenes, thynke you not that I shoulde furthe with other be dryuen awaye, or elles made a laughynge 20 stocke?
‘Goo to, suppose that I were with the Frenche kynge, and there syttyng in hys counsell, whyles that in that moste secrete consultation, the kyng hym self there beynge present in hys owne persone, they beat 25 their braynes, and serche the verye bottomes of theyr wittes to discusse by what crafte and meanes the kyng maye styll kepe Myllayne and drawe to hym agayne fugatyue Naples; and then howe to conquere the Venetians, and howe to bryng vnder his Iurisdiction 30 all Italiye; then howe to wynne the dominion of Flaunders, Brabant, and of all Burgundie, with dyuers other landes, whose kyngdomes he hath longe a goo in mynde and purpose inuaded. Here, whyles one counselleth to conclude a leage of peace with the 35 Venetians, whiche shal so longe endure, as shalbe thought mete and expedient for theire purpose, and to make them also of their counsell, yea, and besydes that to gyue them parte of the praye, whyche afterwarde, when they haue brought theyr purpose abowte after theyr owne myndes they maye requyre and claym agayne. An other thynketh beste to hyere the Germaneynes. An other would haue the fauoure of the Swychers wonne with money. An others aduyse is to appease the puyssaunte powre of the emperours maiestie with golde, as with a moste pleaasunt and acceptable sacrifice. Whyles an other gyueth counsell to make peace wyth the kynge of Arragone, and to restore vnto hym hys owne kyngdome of Nauarra, as a full assurance of peace. An other cummeth wyth his .v. egges, and aduyseth to howke in the kynge of Castell with somme hope of affynytie or allyaunce, and to brynge to theyr parte certeyne peers of hys courte for greate pensions: whyles they all staye at the chyefeste dowte of all, what to doo in the meane tyme with England, and yet agree al in this to make peace with the englishen, and with moste suere and strong bondes to bind that weake and feable frendshyppe, so that they must be called frendes, and hadde in suspicion as enemies; and that therfore the skottes must be hadde in a reddines, as it were in a standing reddie at all occasions, in auters the Englyshe men should sturre neuer so litlle, incontinent to set vpon them; and moreover preuilie and secretly, for openly it maye not be doone by the truce that is taken; pryuelye therfore, I saye, to make muche of some peere of Englande, that is bannished his countrie, whiche must clyme title to the crown of the realme, and affirme hym selfe iuste inheritoure thereof; that by thys subtyll meanes they maye holde to them the kynge, in whom elles they haue but small truste and affiaunce.

'Here, I saye, where so great and high matters be in a consultation, where so manye noble and wyse men counsell their kyng only to warre; here, if I, sely man, should ryse vp and wylle them to turne over the leafe, and learrne a newe lesson; saynng that my counsell is not to medle with Italy, but to tarrye stylly at home, and that the kyngdome of fraunce alone is all moste greater, then that it maye well be gonerned of one man; so that the kyng shoulde not nede to studye 5 howe to gett more: and then shoulde propose vnlo them the decrees of the people that be called the Achoriens, whiche be situate ouer agaynst the Ilande of Vtopia on the sowtheaste syde. Thies Achoriens ones made warre in their kinges quarrel, for to gette 10 him an other kyngdom, whiche he layde clayme vnlo, and auauenced hymself righte inheritoure to the crowne therof, by the title of an olde aliaunce. At the last, when they had gotten it, an sawe that they hadde euuen as mucche vexation and trouble in keping it, as they 15 had in gettyng it; and that other there newe conquered subiectes by sondrye occasions were makynge dayly insurrections to rebell agaynste them, or els that other countreys were contynuallly with diuers inrodes and forraginges inuadinge them; so that they were 20 euer fyghtinge other for them, or agaynste them, and neuer could breke vp their campes: seynge them selfes in the meane season pyllled and impoueryshed; their money carryed owt of the Realme; theyr owne men kylled to mayntayne the glory of an other nation; 25 when they had no warre, peace nothynge better then warre, by reason that their people in warre had inured themselves to corrupte and wycked maners; that they hadde taken a delycte and pleasure in robbynge and stealyng; that through manslaughter they had gathered 30 boldenes to mischiefe; that their lawes were hadde in contempte, and nothynge set by or regarded; that their kyng, beynge troubled with the chardge and gouernaunce of two kingdomes, coulde not nor was not able perfectly to discharge his office towards them 35 bothe; seynge agayne that all thies euelles and troubles were endeles: at the last laid there heads together; and, lyke faithful and louinge subiectes, gaue to their kynge free choyse and libertie to kepe still the one of this .ii. kingdomes, whether he would; alleuyng that he was not able to kepe both, and that they were mo then might wel be goyerned of half a king; for as-muche as no man would be content to take hym for his mulettour that kepeth an other mans moyles besides his. So this good prince was constreyned to be content with his olde kyngdome, and to gyue over the newe to one of his frendes; whiche shortelie after was violentlie dreuen out. Furthermore if I should declare vnto them, that all this busy preparaunce to warre, wherby so many nations for hys sake shuld be brought into a troublesom hurley-burley, when all hys coffers were emptied, his treasures wasted and his people destroyed, should at the length through som mischaunce be in vaine and to none effect; and that theryfore it were best for him to content him selfe with his owne Kingdom of fraunce, as his forfathers and predecessours did before him; to make much of it, to enriche it, and to make it as flourisshing as he could; to endeuoure himself to loue his subiects, and again to be beloued of them; willingly to liue with them, peaceably to goyerne them; and with other kyng-domes not to medle, seinge that whiche he hath all reddy is euyn ynough for hym, yea, and more then he can well turne hym to; thys myne aduyse, maister More, how thynke you it would be harde and taken?' 'So God helpe me, not very thankefully' (quod I).

'Wel, let vs procede then' (quod he). 'Suppose that some kyng and his counsell were together whettinge their wittes, and deuisinge what subtell crafte they myght inuente to enryche the king with greate treasures of money. First one councelleth to rayse and enhaunce the valuacion of money, when the king must paye any; and agayne to calle downe the value of coyne to lesse then it is worthe, when he must receiue or gather any: for thus great sommes shalbe payde with a lytyll money, and where lytle is due muche shalbe receaued. An other counsell eth to fayne warre, that when vnder this colour and pretence the kyng hath gathered great aboundaunce of money, he maye, when it shall please hym, make peace wyth great solemnnitie and holye ceremonies, to blynde the 5 eyes of the poore communaltie, as taking pitie and compassion Gode wote vpon mans bloude, lyke a louing and a mercifull prince.

‘An other putteth the kyng in remembraunce of certeyn olde and moughte-eaten lawes, that of long 10 tyme haue not bene put in execution; whiche, because no man can remembre that they were made, euerie man hath transgressed. The fynes of thies lawes he counsell eth the kynge to require: for there is no waye so profyttable, nor more honorable; as the whiche 15 hath a shewe and colour of iustice. An other ad-uyseth hym to forbidde manye thynges vnder great penalties and fines, specially suche thynges as is for the peoples profit not be vsed; and afterward to dispence for money with them, which by this prohibicion 20 susteyne losse and dammage. For by this meanes the fauour of the people is wonne, and profiite riseth two wayes: first by takyng forfaytes of them whom couetousnes of gaynes hath brought in daunger of thys statute; and also by sellynge preuyleges and 25 licences; whiche the better that the prynce is forsothe, the deerer he selleth them; as one that is lothe to graunte to any pryuate persone any thyng that is agaynste the profytt of hys people; and therfore maye sell none but at an exceeding dere pryce.

‘An other giueth the kynge counsell toendaunger vnto hys grace the iudges of the Reyalme, that he maye haue them euer in hys syde; whyche muste in euerie matter despute and reason for the kynges ryght. And they muste be called into the kynges 35 palace, and be desired to argue and discusse his matters in his owne presence. So there shalbe no matter of his, so openlye wronge and uniuste, wherin one or other of them, other because he wyll haue sumthyng to allege and obiecte, or that he is ashamed to saye that whiche is sayde already, or else to pike a thanke with his prince, wyll not fynde som hole open to set a snare in, wherewith to take the contrarie parte in a trippe. Thus whiles the judges cannot agree amonges themselfes, reasoning and arguing of that which is playne enough, and bringing the manifest trewthe in dowte, in the meane season the kyng may take a fyt occasion to vnderstand the lawe as shal most make for his aduauntage; wher vnto al other for shame or for feare wil agree. Then the Judges maye be bolde to pronounce of the kynges side. For he that geueth sentence for the kyng cannot be without a good excuse. For it shalbe sufficient for hym to haue equitie of his part, or the bare wordes of the lawe, or a wrythen and wrested wnderstandynge of the same, or els, whiche with good and iust Judges is of greater force then all lawes be, the kynges indisputable prerogatiue. To conclude, al the counsellours agre and consent together with the riche Crassus, that no abundance of gold can be sufficient for a prince, which muste kepe and maynteyne an armie: furthermore that a kyng, thoughhe he would, can do nothynge uniyustly; for all that all men haue, yea also the men them selfes, be all his; and that euery man hath so much of his owne as the kynges gentilnes hath not taken from hym; and that it shalbe moste for the kynges aduauntage that his subiectes haue very lytle or nothing in their possession; as whose sauegarde dothe herein consiste, that his people do not waxe wanton and wealthie through riches and libertie; because, where thies thinges be, there men be not wonte patiencyle to obeye harde, vniuste, and vnlawfull commaundementes; where as, on the other part, neade and pouertie doth holde downe and kepe vnder stowte courages, and maketh them patient per-force, takyng from them bolde and rebellynge stomakes.
'Here agayne if I should ryse vp, and boldelye affirme that all thies counsellses be to the kyng dishonoure and reproche, whoes honoure and sauaitie is more and rather supported and vpholden by the wealth and ryches of his people, then by hys owne treasures; 5 and if I shuld declare that the comminaltie chueseth their king for their owne sake and not for his sake; for this intent that through his labour and studie they might al liue wealthily, sauffe from wronges and injuries; and that therfore the kyng ought to take 10 more care for the wealth of his people, then for his owne wealth, euon as the office and dewtie of a shephearde is, in that he is a shepherd, to feade his shepe rather then hymself. For as towchynge this, that they thinke the defence and mayntenaunce of 15 peace to consiste in the pouertie of the people, the thyng it solf sheweth that they be farre owt of the way. For where shall a man finde more wrangling, quarelling, brawling, and chiding, then among beggers? Who be more disierous of newe mutations and altera-20 tions, then they that be not content with the present state of their lyfe? Or, finally, who be bolder stemaked to brynge all in hurlieburlie (therby trustyng to get sum wyndfall), then they that haue nowe nothing to leese? And if so be that there were any 25 kyng, that were so smallye regarded, or so behated of his subiectes, that other wayes he coulde not kepe them in awe, but onlie by open wronges, by pollinge and shauinge, and by brynginge them to beggerie; sewerly it were better for hym to forsake hys kyng-30 dome, then to holde it by this meanes; whereby, though the name of a kyng be kept, yet the maiestie is lost. For it is against the dignitie of a kyng to haue rule ouer beggers, but rather ouer ryche and welthie men. Of thys mynde was the hardie and 25 couragius Fabrice, when he sayde that he had rather be a ruler of ryche men then be ryche hymselfe. And vereyle one man to lyue in pleasure and wealth, whyles all other wepe and smarte for it, that is the parte not of a kynge but of a iayler.

'To be shorte, as he is a folyshe phisition, that cannot cure his patientes disease, onles he caste hym in an other syckenes; so he that cannot amend the 5 liues of his subiectes, but be taking from them the wealth and commoditie of lyfe, he must nedes graunte that he knoweth not the feate howe to gouerne fre men. But let hym rather amende hys owne lyfe, renounce ynhonest pleasures, and forsake pride. For thies be the chiefe vices that cause hym to runne in the contempt or hatered of his people. Let him lyue of hys owne, hurtinge no man. Let him do coste not aboue his power. Let hym restreyne wycked-nes. Let hym preuente vices, and take a waye the 15 occasions of offences be well orderyng his subiectes, and not by sufferyng wickednes to increase, afterward to be punyshed. Let hym not be to hastie in callynge agayne lawes, whiche a custome hathe abrogated; speciallye suche as haue bene long forgotten and neuer 20 lacked nor neaded. And let hym neuer vnder the cloke and pretence of transgression take suche fynes and forfaytes, as no JUDGE wyll suffre a priuate persone to take, as uniuste and ful of gile.

'Here if I should brynge furth before them the lawe 25 of the Macariens, whiche be not farre distaunt from Vtopia; whose kynge, the daye of hys coronacion, is bounde by a solempne othe, that he shall neuer at anye tyme haue in hys treasure aboue a thousande pounde of golde or syluer. They saye a verye good 30 kynge, whiche toke more care for the wealthe and commoditie of hys countrey, then for thenrychinge of himself, made this lawe to be a stop and a barre to kynges for heaping and hording vp so muche money as might impoueryshe their people. For he forsawe 35 that this som of treasure woulde suffice to supporte the kynge in battail against his owne people, if they shuld chaunce to rebell; and also to maintein his warres against the inusions of hys forreyn enemies. Againe he perceiued the same stocke of money to be to litle, and vnsufficient to encourage and able hym wrongfullye to take a waye other mens goodes; whiche was the chiefe cause whie the lawe was made. An other cause was this. He thought that by thys provision his people shuld not lacke money wherewith to maynteyne their dayly occupieng and chaffayre. And seynge the kynge coulde not chewse but laye owt and bestowe all that came in aboue the prescript some of his stocke, he thought he woulde seke no occasions to doo hys subiectes iniurie. Suche a kynge shalbe feared of euell men, and loued of good men. Thies and suche other informatyons yf I should vse emonge men holy enclined and geuen to the contrarye part, how deaffe hearers, thyncke you, should I haue?’

‘Deaffe hearers douteles’ (quod I), ‘and in good faith no marueyle. And to speake as I thynke, truelye I can not a lowe that such communicatyon shall be vsed, or suche cownsell geuen, as you be suere shall never be regarded nor receaued. For how can so straunge informations be profitable, or how can they be beaten into their headdes, whose myndes be all reddye preuented with cleane contrarye persuasyons? Thys schole philosophie is not vnpleasaunte emonge fryndes in famylier communication; but in the coun selles of kynges, where greate matters be debated and reasoned wyth great aucthorytye, thies thynges haue no place.’

‘That is yt whyche I mente’ (quod he), ‘when I said phylosophye hadde no place amonge kinges.’ ‘In dede’ (quod I) ‘this schole philosophie hath not; whiche thinketh all thynges mete for every place. But ther is an other philosophye more cyuyle, whyche knoweth as ye wolde saye her owne stage, and there after orderynge and behauynge herselfe in the playe that she hathe in hande, playethe her parte accordyng-lye wyth comlynes, vteringe nothynge owte of dewe ordre and fassyon. And thys ys the phylosophye that yowe muste vse. Orels, whyles a commodye of Plautus is playinge, and the vyle bondemen skosynge and tryffelynge amonge them selfes, yf yowe shoulde sodenlye come vpon the stage in a philosophers apparrell, and reherse owte of Octauia the place wherein Seneca dysputeth with Nero; had it not bene better for yowe to haue played the domme persone, then by rehersynge that, which servyd nother for the tyme nor place, to haue made suche a tragycall comedye or gallymalfreye? For by bryngynge in other stuffe that nothynge apperteyneth to the presente matter, yowe must nedys marre and peruert the play that ys in hande, thoughghe the stuffe that yowe brynge be muche better. What parte soeuer yowe haue taken vpon yowe, playe that as well as yowe canne, and make the beste of yt; and doo not therefore dysturbe and brynge owte of ordre the hole matter, bycause that an othere, whyche is meryere and bettere, cummethe to yowre remembraunce.

'So the case stondethe in a common wealthe; and so yt ys in the consultatyons of Kynges and prynces. Yf euell opynyons and noughty persuasions can not be vtterly and quyte pluckede owte of their hartes; if you can not euen as you wold remedye vyces, whiche vse and custome hath confirmed; yet for this cause yow must not leaue and forsake the common wealth; yow must not forsake the shippe in a tempeste, bycause yowe can not rule and kepe downe the wyndes. No, nor yow muste not laboure to dryue into their heads newe and straunge informatyons, whyche yow knowe well shalbe nothynge regarded wyth them that be of cleane contrary mindes. But you must with a crafty wile and a subtell trayne studye and endeououre your selfe, asmuch as in yow lyethe, to handle the matter wyttelye and handsomelye for the purpose; and that whyche yowe can not turne to good, so to ordre it that it be not very badde. For it is not possible for all thynges to be well, onles all men were good: which I thynke wil not be yet thys good many yeares.'

'By thys meanes' (quod he) 'nothynge elles wyll be broughte to passe, but, whyles that I goo abowte to remedy the madnes of others, I should be euen as madde as they. For if I wolde speake thynges that be trewe, I muste neades speake suche thinges. But as for to speake false thinges, whether that be a philosopers part, or no, I can not tell; truely it is not my part. Howebeit thys communicatyon of myne, thoughge peraduenture it maye seme vnpleaunte to them, yet can I not see whyle it should seme straunge, or foolishlye newfangled. If so be that I shoulde speake those thynges that Plato fayneth in his weale publique, or that the vtopians do in theires; thies thinges thoughge they were (as they be in dede) better, yet they myghte seme spoken owt of place; for as much as here amonges us, euerye man hath his possessyons seuerall to hymselfe, and there all thinges be common.

'But what was in my communication conteyned, that mighte not and oughte not in anye place to be spoken? sauynge that to them whyche haue throughlye decreed and determined with them selfes to rome hedlonges the contrary waye, it can not be acceptable and plesaunt; because it calleth them backe, and sheweth them the ieopardies. Verilye yf all thynges that euell and vitiouse maners haue caused to seme inconueniente and noughte should be refused, as thinges vnmete and reprochefull, then we must emong Christen people wyncke at the most parte of all those thynges whyche Christe taughte vs, and so streyttlye forbadde them to be wyncked at, that those thinges also whyche he whispered in the eares of hys dyscyples. he commaunded to be proclaymed in open howses. And yet the most parte of them is moore dissident from the maners of the worlde nowe a dayes then my com-municatyon was. But preachers, slye and wilie men, follo wynge your cownsell (as I suppose), bicause they saw men euel willing to frame theyr manners to Christes rule, they haue wrested and wriede hys doctryne, and lyke a rule of leade haue applyed yt to 5 mennys maners; that by some meanes at the leaste waye they myghte agree to gether. Wherby I can not see what good they haue doone, but that men may more sickerlye be euell. And I truelye shoulde preuaile euen asmuche in kinges counselles. For other I muste saye other wayes then they saye, and then I were as good to saye nothynge; or els I muste saye thesame that they saye, and (as Mitio saieth in Terence) helpe to further their madnes. For that craftye wyle and subtill traine of yours, I can not perceaeue to what 15 purpose it serueth; wherewith yow wolde haue me to studdy and endeuoure my selfe, yf all thynges can not be made good, yet to handle them wittily and handsomely for the purpose; that, as farre furth as is possible, they maye not be very euell. For there is 20 no place to dissemble in nor to wincke in. Noughtye cownselles must be openlye allowed, and verye pestylent decrees muste be approued. He shalbe cowntede worse then a spye, yea almoste as euell as a traytoure, that wyth a faynte harte doth prayse euell and noye- 25 some decrees.

Moreouer a man canne haue no occasyon too doo good, chauncynge into the companye of them, whyche wyll sonere make noughte a good man, then be made good themselfes; throughe whose euell companye he 30 shalbe marred, or els yf he remayne good and innocent, yett the wyckednes and folysshenes of others shalbe imputed to hym, and layde in hys necke. So that yt is impossyble wyth that craftye wyle and subtell trayne to turne anny thing to better.

'Wherfore Plato by a goodly simylitude declareth whie wise men refreyyn to medle in the common wealth. For when they see the people swarm in to the strete, and dailie wett to the skin wyth rayne, and yet can not persuade them to goo owt of the rayne, and to take their houses; knowynge well that if they shoulde goo owte to them, they shoulde nothyng preuaule, nor wynge ought by it, but be wett also in the rain; they do kepe them selfes within their howses; beynge content that they be safegh them selfes, seynge they can not remedye the follye of the people.

‘Howe be it dowteles, mayster Moore (to speke truelye as my mynde geueth me), where soever pos sessyons be pryuate, where moneye beareth all the stroke, it is hard and almoste impossyble that there the weale publyque maye iustelye be governed and prosperouslye floryshe. Onles you thynke thus: that Iustyce is there executed, wher all thynges come into the handes of euell men; or that prosperyte their floryssheth, where all is deuyded amonge a fewe; whyche fewe neuerthelesse do not leade their lyues very wealtlyly, and the resydewe lyue myserablye, wretchedlye, and beggerlye.

‘Wherefore when I consyder wyth my selfe, and weye in my mynde, the wyse and godlye ordynaunces of the Vtopyans, amonge whome wyth verye fewe lawes all thynges be so well and wealtlyly ordered, that vertue is had in pryce and estimatyon; and yet, all thynges beynge ther common, euerye man hath abundance of euery thyng: agayne, on the other part, when I compare wyth them so manye natyons euer makynge new lawes, yet none of them all well and suffycyentlye furnysshed wyth lawes; where euery man calleth that he hath gotten hys owne proper and pryuate goodes; where so manye newe lawes daylye made be not suffycyente for euerye man to enioye, defend, and knowe from an other mans that whych he calleth his owne; which thyng the infinyte controuersies in the lawe, that daylye ryse neuer to be ended, playnly declare to be trewe: thies thynges (I say) when I consider with me selfe, I holde well with Plato, and doo no thynge marueyll that he wolde make no lawes for them that refused those lawes, whereby all men shoulde haue and enjoye equall portions of welthes and commodities. For the wise man dyd easely forsee, that thys is the one and onlye waye to the wealthe of a communaltye, ye equaltye of all thyngees sholde be broughte in and stablyshed. Whyche I thynke is not possible to be observed, where euerye mans gooddes be proper and peculyare to him selfe. For where euerye man vnder certeyne tytles and pretences draweth and plucketh to himselfe asmuch as he can, and so a fewe deuide amonge themselfes all the riches that there is, be there never so muche abundance and stooore, there to the resydwawe is lefte lacke and pouertye. And for the moste parte yt chaunceth that thys latter sort is more worthye to enjoye that state of wealth, then the other be; bycause the rych men be couetous, craftye, and vnprouytable: on the other parte, the poore be lowlye, symple, and by their daily labour more profytable to the common welthe then to them selfes.

Thus I doo fullye persuade me selfe, that no equall and iuste distrybutyon of thynges can be made; nor that perfecte wealthe shall euer be among men; onles this propriety be exiled and bannished. But so long as it shal contynew, so long shal remayn among the most and best part of men the heuy and inequitable burden of pouerty and wretchednes. Which, as I graunt that it may be sumwhat eased, so I utterly deny that it can holy be taken away. For if ther wer a statute made, that no man should possesse aboue a certein measure of ground, and that no man should haue in his stocke aboue a prescripte and appointed some of money; if it were by certein lawes decreed that nother the king should be of to greate powre, nother the people to prowde and wealthye; and that offices shold not be obtained by inordinate suyte or by brybes and giftes; that they should nother be bought nor sold, nor that it sholde be needful for the officers to be at any cost or charge in their offices: for so occasion is given to the officers by fraud and rauin to gather vp their money again, and by reason of giftes and bribes the offices be given to rich men, which shoulde rather have bene executed of wise men; by such lawes, I say, like as sicke bodies that be desparat and past cure, be wonne with continual good cherissing to be kept vp, so thies euelles also might be lightened and mytygated. But that they may be perfectlye cured and brought to a good and vpryght state, it is not to be hoped for, whiles every man is maister of his owne to hym selfe. Yea, and whyles yow goo abowt to do your cure of one part, yow shall make bygger the sore of an other parte: so the healpe of one causeth anothers harme, for as much as nothynge can be geuen to annye man, onles that be taken from an other.

'But I am of a contrary opinion' (quod I) 'for me thynketh that men shal neuer there lyue wealthelye, where all thynge be commen. For how can there be abundaunce of gooddes, or of any thing, where every man with draweth his hande from labour? whome the regarde of his owne gaines driueth not to woorke, and the hoope that he hath in other mens trauayles maketh hym slowthfull. Then when they be prycked with pouertye, and yet no man can by any law or right defend that for his owne, which he hath gotten wyth the laboure of his owne handes, shall not ther of necessitie be continuall sedition and bloodshede? specially the authoritie and reuerende of magistrates being taken away; which what place it maye haue wyth suche men, amonge whome is no difference. I can not deuise.' 'I maruell not' (quod he) 'that you be of this opinion. For you conceaue in your mynde other none at all, or els a very false ymage and symylitude of thys thynge. But yf yow hadde bene wyth me in Vtopia, and hadde presently sene their fasshions and lawes, as I dyd, whiche liued ther. v. yeares and moore, and wolde neuer haue commen thence, but only to make that new lande knownen her; then dowteles you wold graunt, that you neuer sawe people well ordered, but only there.'

'Surely' (quod maister Peter), 'it shalbe harde for you to make me beleue, that ther is better order in that newe lande, then is here in thies countreys that wee knowe. For good wyttes be aswell here as there; and I thynke owr commen wealthes be auncienter than theires: wherin long vse and experience hath fownde owt many thinges commodious for mannnes life, besides that many thinges her aamonge vs haue bene founde by chaunce, whych no wytte colde euer haue deuysed.'

'As towchynge the auncyetnes' (quod he) 'of common wealthes, than you might better iudge, if you had red the histories and chronicles of that lande; which if wee may beleue, cities were there, before there were men here. Now what thinge soeuer hitherto by witte hath bene deuised, or found by chaunce, that myghte be aswell there as here. But I thinke verily, though it were so that we did passe them in witte, yet in studye and laboursome endeuoure they farre passe vs. For (as there Cronicles testifie) before our arriuall ther they neuer harde any thinge of vs, whome they call the ultraequinoctialles; sauinge that ones about M.CC. yeares ago, a certein shyppe was loste by the Ile of Vtopia whiche was driuen thither by tempest. Certeyn Romayns and Egyptyans were caste on lande, whyche after that neuer wente thence.

'Marke nowe what profite they tooke of thys one occasion, through deleygence and earneste trauaile. There was no craft nor scyence within the impery of Rome, wher of any profite could rise, but they other lerned it of thies strauengers, or els, of them taking occasion to searche for yt, fownde it owte. So great profiyte was it to them that euer annye wente thyther from hence. But yf annye lyke chaunce before thys hath brought any man from thence hether, that is as quyte out of remembraunce, as this also perchaunce in time to come shalbe forgotten that euery I was there. And like as they quickelye, almoste at the first meting, made their owne, what so euery is among vs wealthely 5 deuysed; so I suppose it wold be longe befor we wolde receaue any thing that amonge them is better insty-tuted then amonge vs. And thys I suppose is the chiefe cause whie theyr common wealthes be wyselyere gouerned, and do florysh in more wealth then ours; though wee nother in wytte nor in ryches be ther inferiours.'

'Therfore, gentle maister Raphaell' (quod I) 'I praye you and besche yow descrybe vnto vs the Iland. And study not to be shorte; but declare largely in order 15 their groundes, thire ryuers, their cities, thiere people, thiere manners, their ordenaunces, ther lawes, and, to be short, al things that you shal thinke vs desierous to knowe. And you shal thinke vs desierous to know what soeuer we knowe not yet.' 'There is nothing' 20 (quod he) 'that I will do gladlier. For all these things I haue freshe in mind. But the matter re-quireth leasure.' 'Let vs go in therfor' (quod I) 'to dinner: afterward we will bestowe the time at our pleasure.' 'Content' (quod he) 'be it.' So we went 25 in and dyned.

When diner was done, we came into the same place again, and sate vs downe vpon the same benche, com-maundingoure seruauntes that no man should trowble vs. Then I and maister Peter Giles desiered maister 30 Raphaell to perfoarme his promise. He therfore seinge vs desierous and willinge to harken to him, when he had sit still and paused a litle while, musing and bethinkynge hymselfe, thus he began to speake.

The ende of the ffyrste boke.
[Chapter I]

The second
Boke of the communication of Raphael Hythlodaye, concernyng
the best state of a common wealth: conteynyng the discription of Vtopia, with a large declaration of the Godly gouernement, and of all the good lawes and orders of the same Ilande.

The Ilande of Vtopia conteyñeth in breadthe in the myddell part of it (for there it is brodest) CC. miles.
Whiche bredthe continueth through the moste parte of the lande, sauyng that by lytle and lytle it commeth in and waxeth narrower towardes both the endes.
Whiche fetchynge about a circuite or compasse of .v.c.
myles, do fassion the hole Ilande lyke to the newe mone. Betwene thys two corners the sea runneth in, diuuydyng them a sonder by the distaunce of .xi. miles or there aboutes, and there surmounteth into a large and wyde sea, which, by reason that the lande of euery syde compasseth it about, and shiltreth it from the windes, is not rough nor mountith not with great waues, but almost floweth quietlye, not muche vnlike a great standing powle; and maketh almoiste al the space within the bellye of the lande in maner of a hauen; and to the great commoditie of the In-habitauntes receaueth in shyppes towardes euery parte of the lande. The forefrontes or frontiers of the .ii.
corners, what wythe fordys and shelues, and what with rockes, be very ieoperdous and daungerous. In the middel distaunce betwene them both standeth vp aboue the water a great rocke, which therfore is nothing perillous bicause it is in sight. Vpon the top 5 of this rocke is a faire and a strong towre builded, which thei holde with a garison of men. Other rockes ther be, that lye hidde vnder the water, and therefore be daungerous. The channelles be knownen onely to themselves. And therfore it seldome chaunceth that 10 any straunger, oneles he be guided by a Vtopian, can come in to this hauen. In so muche that they themselfes could skaselie entre without ieoperdie, but that their way is directed and ruled by certaine lande markes standing on the shore. By turning, trans-15 latynge, and remouinge this markes into other places, they maye destroye their enemies nauies, be thei neuer so many. The out side of the lande is also full of hauens; but the landing is so suerly defenced, what by nature and what by workmanshyp of mans hande, 20 that a fewe defenders maye dryue backe many armies.

Howebeit, as they saye, and as the fassion of the place it selfe doth partely shewe, it was not euer compassed about with the sea. But kyng Vtopus, whose name as conquerour the Iland beereth (for before that 25 tyme it was called Abraxa), which also brought the rude and wild people to that excellent perfection, in al good fassions, humanitie, and ciuile gentilnes, wherin they now go beyond al the people of the world; euen at his first arriuinge and enteringe vpon the lande, 30 furth with obteynynghe the victory caused .xv. myles space of vplandyshe grounde, where the sea had no passage, to be cut and dygged vp; and so brought the sea rounde aboute the lande. He set to thys worke not only the inhabitauntes of the Ilande (because they 35 should not thynke it done in contumelye and despyte), but also all hys owne soldiours. Thus the worke, beyng diuyded into so great a numbere of workemen, was with exceeding maruelous spede dyspatched. In so muche that the borderers, whiche at the fyrst began to mocke and to gieste at thys vayne enterpryse, then turned theyr laughter to marueyle at the successe, and to feare.

There be in the Ilande .liii. large and faire cities or shiere townes, agreyng all together in one tonge, in lyke maners, institucions, and lawes. They be all set and situate a lyke, and in all poyntes fashioned a lyke, as farfurth as the place or plotte suffereth. Of thies cyties they that be nighest together be xxiii. myles a sonder. Again there is none of them distaunt from the next aboue one dayes iorneye a fote.

There cum yearly to Amaurote out of euery cytie .iii. olde men, wyse and well experienced, there to entreate and debate of the common matters of the lande. For thys cytie (because it standeth iust in the myddes of the Ilande, and is therfore moste mete for the embassadours of all partes of the realme) is taken for the chiefe and head cytie. The precinctes and boundes of the shieres be so commodiously appoynted out, and set furth for the cyties, that neuer a one of them all hath of anye syde lesse then xx. myles of grounde, and of som syde also muche more, as of that part where the cyties be of farther distaunce a sonder. None of the cities desire to enlarge the boundes and lymites of their shieres. For they count them selfes rather the good husbandes, then the owners of their landes.

They haue in the countrey in all partes of the shiere howses or fermes byulded, wel appointed and furnyshed with all sortes of instrumentes and tooles belongyng to husbandrie. Thies houses be inhabited of the cytezens, whiche cum thyther to dwel by course. No howsholde or ferme in the countrey hath fewer then .xl. persones, men and women, besydes two bonden men, whiche be all vnder the rule and order of the good man and the good wyfe of the house, beynge bothe very sage and discrete persones. And euery .xxx. fermes or families haue one heade ruler, whiche is called a Phylarche, being as it were a hed baylyfe. Out of euery one of thies families or fermes cummeth euery yeare into the cytie .xx. persones whiche haue contynewed .ii. yeres before in the countrey. In their place so manye freshe be sent thither out of the citie, whiche of them that haue bene there a yeare all ready, and be therfore expert and conninge in husbandry, shalbe instructed and taught; and they the next yeare shall teache other. This order is vsed, for feare that other skarsenes of victualles or some other like incommoditie shuld chaunce through lacke of knowledge, yf they should be al together newe and fresh and vnexperte in husbandrie. This maner and fassion of yearlye chaung-inge and renewinge the occupiers of husbandrie, though it be solempe and customablie vsed, to thintent that no man shall be constrayned against his wil to contynewe longe in that harde and sharpe kynde of lyfe, yet manye of them haue suche a pleasure and delete in husbandrye, that they obteyne a longer space of yeares. Thies husbandmen plowe and till the grounde, and bryde vp cattell, and make readye woode, whiche they carrye to the cytie, other by lande or by water, as they maye moste conuenyently. They brynge vp a greate multytude of pulleyne, and that by a meruelous policie. For the hennes do not syt vpon the egges: but by kepynge them in a certayne equall heate, they brynge lyfe into them, and hatche them. The chykens, assone as they be come owte of the shell, followe men and women in steade of the hennes.

They brynge vp very fewe horses; nor non, but very fearce ones; and for none other use or purpose, but only to exercyse their youthe in rydynge and feates of armes. For oxen be put to all the labour of plowyngg and drawyng. Whiche they graunte to be not so good as horses at a sodeyne brunt, and (as we saye) at a dead lifte; but yet they holde opinion, that they wyll abyde and suffre much more labour and payne then horses
wyl. And they thinke that they be not in daunger and subiecte vnto so manye dysseases, and that they bee kepte and maynteyned wyth muche lesse coste and charge; and fynally that they be good for meate when they be past labour.

They sowe corne onlye for bread. For their drynke is other wyne made of grapes, or els of apples or peares, or els it is cleane water; and many tymes methe made of honey or liqueresse sodde in water, for therof they haue great store. And though they knowe certeynlye (for they knowe it perfectly in dede), how much victayles the cytie with the hole countrey or shiere rounde a boute it dothe spende; yet they sowe much more corne, and bryed vp muche more cattell, then serueth for their own vse. And the overplus they parte amonge their borderers. What soeuer necessary thynges be lackynge in the countrey, all suche stufie they fetche out of the citie; where without anye exchaungue they easelye obteyne it of the magistrates of the citie. For euerye moneth manye of them goo into the cytie on the hollye daye. When theyr haruest daye draweth nere and is at hande, then the Philarches, whiche be the hed officers and bayliffes of husbandrye, sende woorde to the magistrates of the citie, what numbere of haruest men is nedefull to bee sente to them out of the cytie. The whiche companye of haruest men,

beynge there readye at the daye appoynted, almoste in one fayre daye dispatcheth all the haruest woorke.

(,,:
As for their Cyties, he that knoweth one of them knoweth them all: they be all so lyke one to an other, as ferfurth as the nature of the place permitteth. I wyll describe theryfore to yowe one or other of them, for it skylleth not greatly whych; but which rather then Amaurote? Of them all this is the worthiest and of moste dignitie. For the resydwe knowledge it for the head Cytie, because there is the councell house. Nor to me any of them al is better beloued, as wherein I lyued fyue hole yeares together.

The cytie of Amaurote standeth vpon the syde of a low hill, in fashion almoste four square. For the bredeth of it begynneth a litle beneth the toppe of the hyll, and styll contyneweth by the space of twoo miles vntyll it cum to the ryuer of Anyder. The lenghte of it whiche lyeth by the ryuers syde is sumwhat more.

The ryuere of Anyder rysethe .xxiii. myles aboue Amaurote owte of a lytte sprynghe. But beynge increasede by other small floodes and broukes that runne into yt, and amonge othere .ii. sumwhat bygge ons, before the cytye yt ys halfe a myle brode, and farther broder. And .lx. myles beyonde the citye yt falleth into the Ocean sea. By al that space that lyethe betwene the sea and the cytye, and a good sorte of myles also aboue the Cytye, the water ebbethe and floweth the .vi. houres togethore wyth a swyfte tyde. Whan the sea floweth in for the lenghte of xxx. myles, yt fyllethe all the Anyder wyth salte water, and dryueth the backe the fresshe water of the ryuer.
And somewhat further yet changeth the swetenes of the freshe water wyth saltynes. But a letell beyonde that, the ryuer waxeth swet, and runneth forby the city fresh and pleisaunt. And when the sea ebbeth, and goyth backe agayn, the freshe water followeth yt almoste euyn to the verye falle in to the sea.

There goeth a brydge ouer the ryuer made not of pyles or of tymber, but of stonewarke, with gorgious and substanciall archeis at that parte of the cytie that is farthest from the sea; to the intent that shyppes maye goo alonge forby all the syde of the cytie without lette. They haue also an other ryuere, whiche in dede is not very great. But it runneth gentelly and pleasauntlye. For it ryseth euyn out of the same hyll that the cytie standeth vpon, and runneth downe a slope through the mydles of the citie into Anyder.

And because it ryseth a lytle without the citie, the Amaurotians haue inclosed the head sprynge of it with stronge fences and bulwarkes, and so haue ioyned it to the cytie. Thys is done to the intente that the water should not be stopped, nor turned a waye, or poysoned, if their enemyes should chaunce to come vpon them. From thence the water is deryued and brought downe in cannellis of brycke dyuers wayes into the lower partes of the cytie. Where that cannot be done, by reason that the place wyll not suffer it, there they gather the rayne water in greate cisternes, which doth them as good seruice.

The cytie is compassed aboute wyth a highe and thycke walle, full of turrettes and bulwarkes. A drye dyche, but deape and brode and overgrown with busshes, briers, and thornes, goeth about .iii. sydes or quarters of the cytie. To the fourth syde the ryuere it selfe serueth for a dytche. The stretes be appoynted and set forth verye commodious and hand- some, bothe for carriage and also agaynst the wyndes. The houses be of fayre and gorgious buyldyng, and in the streete syde they stonde ioyned together in a longe rowe throughe the hole strete without anye partition or separation. The stretes be twenty fote bроде. On the backe syde of the houses, through the hole lengthe of the strete, lye large gardeynes, whyche be closed in rounde about with the backe parte of the stretes. Every house hath two doores; one into the strete, and a posternne doore on the backsyde into the gardyne. Thyes doores be made with two leaues, neuer locked nor bolted, so easye to be opened that they wil followe the least drawing of a fynger and shutte agayne by themselfes. Everye man that wyll maye goo yn, for there is nothynge wythin the howses that ys pryuate, or annye mannes owne. And everye .x. yeare they chaunge their howses by lotte.

They sett great stoore be theyr gardeins. In them they haue vyneyardes, all manner of frute, herbes, and flowres, so pleisaunte, so well furnished, and so fynelye kepte, that I neuer sawe thynge more frutefull nor better trymmed in anny place. Their studye and deligence herin cummeth not only of pleasure, but also of a certeyne stryffe and contentyon that is betwene strete and strete, concernynge the trymmynge, husbanding, and furnyshynge of their gardeyns, every man for hys owne part. And verily yow shall not lyghtly fynde in all the citye annye thynge that is more commodyous, other for the proffyte of the citizins, or for pleasure. And therfore it may seme that the first fownder of the city mynded nothynge so muche as he dyd thies gardeyns.

For they say that kyng Vtopus himself, euen at the first begenning, appointed and drew furth the platte fourme of the city into this fasion and figure that it hath nowe; but the gallaunt garnishing, and the bewtiful setting furth of it, wherunto he sawe that one mans age wold not suffice, that he left to his posterity. For their Cronicles, which they kepe written with al deligent circumspection, conteining the history of m. viic. lx. years, euen from the fyrste conquest of the Iland, recorde and witnesse that the howses in the beginning were verye lowe, and lyke homelye cotages, or poore shepparde howses, made at all adventures of euerie rude pyece of woode that came fyrste to handes, wyth mudde walles, and rydged 5 rooffes thatched ouer with straw. But nowe the houses be curiously builded, after a gorgiouse and gallaunt sort, with .iii. storries one ouer another. The owte sydes of the walles be made other of harde Flynte or of plauster, or elles of brycke; and the ynner sydes 10 be well strengthened with tymber woorke. The rooffes be playne and flatte, couered with a certayne kinde of plaster, that is of no coste, and yet so tempered that no fyre can hurte or peryshe it, and withstandeth the violence of the weether better then 15 anye leade. They kepe the wynde out of their windowes with glasse, for it is there much vsed; and sumwhere also with fyne lynnen clothe dipped in oyle or ambre; and that for twoo commodities. For by thys meanes more lyght cummeth in, and the 20 wynde is better kept out.
Chapter III

Of the Ma-gystrates.

Everye thirty families or fermes chewse them yearlye an offycer, whyche in their olde language is called the Syphograunte, and by a newer name the Phylarche. Everye tenne Syphograuntes, with all their 300 families, bee vnder an offycer whyche was ones called the Tranibore, now the chiefe Phylarche.

Moreover, as concerninge the electyon of the Prynce, all the Syphograuntes, which be in number 200, first be sworne to chewse him whome they thynke moste mete and expedyente. Then by a secrete electyon they name prynce one of those, whome the people before named vnto them. For owte of the quarters of the citie there be chosen, owte of everye quarter one, to stande for the election, whiche be put vp to the counsell. The princes office contineweth all his liffe time, onles he be deposed or put downe for suspition of tirannye. They chewse the tranibores yearlye, but lightlye they chaunge them not. All the other offices be but for one yeare. The Tranibores everye thyrde daye, and sumtymes, if neade be, oftener, come into the counsell houre with the prynce. Their counsell is concernynge the common wealth. Yf there be annye controversyes amonge the commoners, whyche be very fewe, they dyspatche and ende them by and by. They take euer ii. Siphograntes to them in counsell, and everye daye a newe coupel. And that ys prouydede that no thynge towchyng the common wealth the shalbe confyrmed and ratifyed, on les yt haue bene reasonede of and debatede iii. dayes in the coun-cell, before yt be decreed. It is deathe to haue annye consultatyon for the common wealthe owte of the cownsell, or the place of the common electyon. Thys statuette, they saye, was made to thentente, that the prynte and Tranibores myghte not easely conspire together to oppresse the people by tyrannye, and to chaunge the state of the weale publique. Therfore matters of greate weyghte and importaunce be brought to the electyon house of the syphograuntes, whych open the matter to their familyes; and afterwarde, when they haue consulted among them selves, they shewe their deuyse to the cowncell. Sumtyme the matter is brought before the cowncell of the hole Ilande.

Furthermore thys custome also the cowncell vseth, to dyspute or reason of no matter the same daye that it ys fyurste proposed or putt furthe, but to dyfferre it to the nexte syttyngge of the cownsell. Bycause that no man when he hathe rasshelye there spoken that cummeth fyurste to hys tonges ende, shalt then afterwarde rather studye for reasons wherwyth to defende and confyrme hys fyurste folyshe sentence, than for the commodytje of the common wealthe; as one rather wyllynge the harme or hynderaunce of the weale publyque, then annye losse or dymynutyon of hys owne existymatyon; and as one that wolde not for shame (which is a verye folyshe shame) be cowntede annye thynge ouerseen in the matter at the fyurste; who at the fyurste owghte to haue spoken rather wysely then hastely or rashelye.
Husbandrye is a scyence common to them all in-general, both men and women, wherin they be all experte and cunnynge. In thys they be all instructe euen from their youth; partely in scholes with tradtions and preceptes, and partely in the contrye nighe the cytye, brought vp as it wer in playing, not onlye beholdynge the vse of it, but by occasyon of exercisinge their bodies practising it also.

Besides husbandry, which (as I sayde) is common to them all, euery one of them learneth one or other seuerall and particular scyence, as hys owne proper crafte. That is most commonly other clothe-workinge in wolde or flaxe, or masonrie, or the smythes crafte, or the carpentes scyence. For there is none other occupacyon that anye numbere to speke of doth vse there. For their garmentes, whyche through owte all the Ilande be of one fassion, (sauynge that there is a difference betwene the mans garmente and the womans, betwene the maried and the unmaryed), and this one continueth for euer more unchaunged, semely and comely to the eye, no let to the mouynge and weldynge of the bodie, also fitte bothe for winter and summer; as for thies garmentes (I saye), euery familye maketh their own.

But of the other foreseyde craftes euerye man learneth one; and not only the men, but also the women. But the women, as the weaker sorte, be put to the easere craftes. They worke wull and flaxe. The other more laborsome sciences be committed to the men. For the moste parte euerye man is brought vp in his fathers craft. For moste commonly they be naturally therto bente and in-clined. But yf a mans minde stonde to any other, he is by adoption put into a famelye of that occupa-tion which he doth most fantasy. Whome not only his father, but also the magistrates do diligently looke to, that he be putt to a discrete and an honest householder. Yea and if any other, when he hath learned one crafte, be desierous to lerne also another, he ys lykewyse suffrede and permytted. When he hathe learned bothe, he occupyethe whether he wyll; onles the cytye haue more neade of the one then of the other.

The chyefe and almoste the onelye offyce of the Syphograuntes ys to see and take hede that no man sytte ydle, but that euerye one applye hys owne crafte wyth earneste delygence; and yet for all that not to be weryed from earlye in the mornynge to late in the euennynge wyth contynuall woorke, lyke laborynge and toylynge beasts. For thys ys worse then the myserable and wretced condytyon of bondemen; whyche neuer the lesse is almoste euery where the lyffe of woorkemen and artsfycers, sauynge in vtopia. For they, dyuydinge the daye and the nyghte into xxiii. iust houres, appoynte and assygne only vi. of those houres to woorke; iii. before none, vpon the whyche they goo streyghte to dyner; and after dyner, when they haue rested ii houres, then they woorke iii.; and vpon that they goo to supper. Aboute viii. of the clocke in the euenynges (cowntyngone one of the clocke at the fyrste houre after none) they go to bedde. viii. houres they giue to sleape. All the voide time, that is betwene the houres of woorke, slepe, and meate, that they be suffered to bestowed, euerye man as he lyketh beste hym selfe: not to thynfente they shoulde myspende thys tyme in ryote, or slough-fullenes; but, beynge then lyncensed from the laboure of theyr owne occupacyons, to bestowed the time wel and thristely vpon some other good science, as shall please them. For yt ys a solempne custome there, to haue lectures daylye earlye in the morning; wher to be present they onlye be constreined that be namelye chosen and appoynted to learnynge. Howe be yt a greate multytude of euerye sorte of people, bothe men and women, goo to heare lectures; some one and some an other, as euerye mans nature is inclyned. Yet, this notwithstonding, yf any man had rathere bestowe thys tyme vpon hys owne occupatyon (as yt chaunceth in manye, whose myndes ryse not in the contem plains of annye scyence lyberal), he is not letted nor prohibited, but is also praysed and commended, as profitable to the common wealthe.

After supper they bestowe one houre in playe; in somer in their gardeynes, in winter in their commen halles, where they dyne and suppe. There they exercise them selfes in musyke, or els in honeste and holsome communicacion. Diceplaye, and suche other foilish and pernicious games, they knowe not; but they vse .ii. games not mucche vnlike the chesse. The one is the battell of nombers, wherein one numbre stealethe awaye another. The other is wherein vices fyghte wyth vertues, as it were in battell array, or a set fyld. In the which game is verye properlye shewed bothe the striffe and discorde that vices haue amonge themselues, and agayne theire unitye and concorde againste vertues; and also what vices be repugnaunt to what vertues; with what powre and strenght they assaile them openlye; by what wieles and subtelye they assaute them secretelye; with what helpe and aide the vertues resiste, and overcome the puissaunce of the vices; by what craft they frustate their purposes; and finally by what sleight or means the one getteth the victory.

But here, lease you be deceaued, one thinge you muste looke more narrowly vpon. For seinge they bestowe but vi. houres in woork, perchaunce you maye thinke that the lacke of some necessarype thinges herof may ensewe. But this is nothinge so. For that small time is not only inough, but also to muche, for the stoor and abandaunce of all thinges that be requisite, other for the necessitie or commoditie of liffe. The whiche thing yow also shall perceau, if you weye and 5 consider with your selfes how great a parte of the people in other contres lyueth ydle. First, almoost all women, which be the halfe of the hole numbre; or els, if the women be annye where occupied, their most comonlye in their steade the men be ydle. 10 Besydes thys, how great, and howe ydle a companye ys theyr of prystes, and relygyous men, as they call them? Put there to all ryche men, speciallye all landed men, whyche comonly be called gentylmen, and noble men. Take into this numbre also their seruauntes; I meane, all that flocke of stout, bragging, russhe bucklers. Ioyne to them also sturdy and valiaunt beggers, clokinge their idle leffe vnder the colour of some disease or sickenes. And truely you shall find them much fewer then you thought, by 2 whose labour all these thynges be gotten, that men vse and lyue bye. Nowe consyder wyth youre selfe, of thies fewe that do woorke, how few be occupied in necessary woorkes. For where money beareth all the swing, ther many vayne and superfluous occupations 2 must nedys be vsed, to serue only for ryotous super-fluyte and vnhoneste pleasure. For the same multytude that now is occupied in woorke, if they were deuided into so few occupations as the necessary vse of nature requyreh, in so greate plentye of thinges, as then of necessity wolde ensue, doubtles the prices wolde be to lytle for the artifycers to maynteyne theyre lyuynges.
But yf all thyes, that be nowe bisiede about vnprofittable occupations, with all the hole flocke of them that lyue ydellye and slouthfullye, whyche consume and waste euerye one of them more of thies thinges that come by other mens laboure, then ii. of the work men themselves doo; yf all thyes (I saye) were sette to profytable occupatyons, yowe easelye perceauue howe lytle tyme wolde be enoughe, yea and to muche, to strore vs wyth all thynge that maye be requysyte other for necessytye, or for commoditye; yea, or for pleasure, so that the same pleasure be trewe and 5 naturall.

And thys in Vtopia the thynge yt selfe maketh manifeste and playne. For thère in all the citye, wyth the hole contreye or shyere adioynynge to yt, scaselye 500 persons of all the hole numbre of men and women, 10 that be nother to olde nor to weake to woorke, be licensed from labour. Amonge them be the Siphograuntes, which (though they be by the lawes exempte and pryuyleged from labour) yet they exempte not themselfes; to the intent they maye the rather by 15 their example proouke other to woorke. The same vacation from labour do they also enioye, to whome the people, persuaded by the commendation of the priestes and secrete election of the Siphograntes, haue geuen a perpetual licence from labour to learnyng. But if any one of them proue noott acordyng to the expectation and hoope of him conceaued, he is furth with plucked backe to the company of artificers. And contrarye wise, often yt chaunceth that a handicraftes man doth so earnestly bestowe hys vacaunte and spare 25 houres in learninge, and through dilygence so profytte therin, that he is taken frome hys handy occupation, and promoted to the company of the learned.

Owt of this ordre of the learned be chosen ambassa-so muche worke, as other nations doo. For firste of all the buildinge or repayring of houses asketh euer where so manye mens continuall labour, bicause that the vnth(r)yfty heyre suffreth the howses that hys father buylde in contynewaunce of tyme to fall in decay. 5 So that which he myghte haue vpholden wyth lytle coste, hys successoure is constreynde to byylde yt agayne a newe, to hys greate chardge. Yea, manye tymes also the howse that stoode one man in muche moneye, anothere ys of so nyce and soo delycate 10 a mynde that he settethe nothynge by yt. And yt beynge neglected, and therefore shortelye fallynge into ruyne, he byylde the vppe anothere in an othere place wyth no lesse coste and chardge. But emonge the Vtopyans, where all thynges be sett in a good ordre, 15 and the common wealthe in a good staye, yt very seldome chaunceth, that they chuse a newe plotte to byylde an house vpon. And they doo not only finde spedy and quicke remedies for present fautes, but also preuente them that be like to fall. And by this 2c meanes their houses continewe and laste very longe with litle labour and small reparacions; in so much that this kind of woorkemen sumtimes haue almost nothinge to doo; but that they be commaunded to hewe timbre at home, and to square and trime vp 2s stones, to the intente that if anyye woorke chaunce, it may the spedelie rise.

Now, Syre, in theire apparell marke, I praye yow, howe few woorkemen they neade. Fyrste of all, whyles they be at woorke, they be couered homely & with leather or skinnes that will last .vii. yeares. When they go furthe a brode, they caste vpon them a cloke, whycbe hydeth the other homelye apparell. Thyes clookes thoroughe owte the hole Ilande be all of one coloure, and that is the naturall colour of the wul. They therfor do not only spende muche lesse wullen clothe then is spente in othere contreys, but also the same standeth them in muche lesse coste.
But lynen clothe ys made wyth lesse laboure, and ys therefore hadde more in vse. But in lynen clothe onlye whytenese, in wullen onlye clenlynes, ys regarde. As for the smalnese or fynesse of the threde, that ys no thynge passed for. And thys ys the cause wherfore in other places .iiii. or v. clothe gownes of dyuers colours, and as manye sylke cootes, be not enoughe for one man. Yea, and yf he be of the delycate and nyse sorte, x. be to fewe; where as there one garment wyll serue a man mooste commonlye .ii. 10 yeares. For whie shoulde he desyre moo? seing if he had them, he should not be the better hapt or covered from colde, nother in his apparell any whyt the cumlyer.

Wherefore, seynge they be all exercysed in profyt-able occupatyons, and that fewe artyfycers in the same craftes be suffycyente, thys ys the cause that, plente of all thynges beynge emonge them, they doo sumtymes bring furthe an innumerable companye of people to amende the hyghe wayes, yf annye be broken. Manye times also, when they haue no such woorke to be occupied about, an open proclamation is made that they shall bestowe fewer houres in woorke. For the magistrates do not exercise their citizens against theire willes in vnneedfull laboures. For whie? in the institution of that weale publique this ende is onlye and chiefly pretended and mynded, that what time maye possibly be spared from the necessary occupations and affayyres of the commen wealthe, all that the cytizeins sholde withdrawe from the bodely seruice to the free liberty of the mind and garnisshing of the same. For herin they suppose the felicity of this liffe to consist.
[Chapter V]

Of their living and mutuall conversation together.

But now will I declare how the citizens use themselves one towards another; what familiar occupieng and enterteynment there is among the people; and what fashion they use in distributing every thynge. First, the city consisteth of families: the families most commonlie be made of kinredes. For the women, when they be maryed at a lawfull age, they goo into their husbandes houses. But the male chyldren, with all the hole male ofspring, continewe still in their owne familie, and be gouverned of the eldest and auncientest father, onles he dote for age; for then the next to hym in age is put in his rowme.

But to thintent the prescript numbre of the citezens shoulde nether decrease, nor aboue measure increase, it is ordeined that no famylie, whiche in every citie be vi. thousand in the hole, besydes them of the contrey, shall at ones haue fewer chyldren of the age of xiii. yeares or there aboute then x., or mo then 2 xvi. ; for of chyldren vnder thyss age no numbre can be appointed. This measure or numbre is easely observerd and kept, by putting the that in fuller families be aboue the numbre into families of smaller increase. But if chaunce be that in the hole citie the 2 stoore encrease above the iust numbre, therewith they fyll vp the lacke of other cityes. But if so be that the multitude throughout the hole Ilande passe and excede the dew numbre, then they chewse out of every citie certeyn cytezens, and buylde vp a towne vnder their owne lawes in the nexte lande where the inhabitauntes haue mucho waste and vnoccupied grounde, receaungne also of the inhabitauntes to them, if they wil ioyne and dwel with them. They, thus ioyning and dwelling together, do easelye agre in one fassion of liuing, and that to the great wealth of both the peoples. For they so brynge the matter about by 5 their lawes, that the grounde which before was nether good nor profitable for the one nor for the other, is nowe sufficiencte and frutefull enough for them both. But if the inhabitauntes of that lande wyll not dwell with them, to be ordered by their lawes, then they 10 dryue them out of those boundes, which they haue limited and apointed out for themselues. And if they resiste and rebell, then they make warre agaynst them. For they counte this the moste iust cause of warre, when any people holdeth a piece of grounde 15 voyde and vacaunt to no good nor profitable vse, kepyng other from the vse and possession of it, whiche notwithstandingyng by the lawe of nature ought thereof to be nowryshed and relieued. If any chaunce do so muche dimynishe the numbre of anye of their 20 cyties, that it cannot be fylled vp agayne wythout the diminishynge of the iust numbre of the other cyties (whiche they say chaunced but twyse syns the begynnynge of the lande, through a greate pestilente plage), then they make vp the numbre with cytezens 25 fetched out of their owne forreyne townes; for they hadde rather suffer theyr forreyn townes to decaye and peryshe, then annye cytie of their owne Ilande to be dimynyshed.

But nowe agayne to the conuersation of the cytezens 30 amongst themselves. The eldeste (as I sayde) rueleth the familie. The wyfes bee ministers to theyr husbandes, the chyldren to theyr parentes, and, to bee shorte, the yonger to theyr elders. Euerye Cytie is diuided into foure equall partes. In the myddes of 35 euery quarter there is a market place of all maner of thynges. Thether the workes of euery familie be brought in to certeyne houses. And euery kynde of thynge is layde vp seuerall in barnes or store houses. From hence the father of euery familie or euery housholder fetcheth whatsoever he and hys haue neade of, and carieth it awaye with hym without money, without exchaunge, without annye gage or pledge. 5 For whye should anye thynge be denied vnto hym; seyng there is abundance of all thynge, and that it is not to be feared lest anye man wyll aske more then he neadeth? For whie should it be thoughte that that man would aske more then enough, which is 10 sewre neuer to lacke? Certeynly, in all kyndes of lyuynge creatures, other fere of lacke doth cause couetousnes and rauyne, or in man only pryde; whiche counteth it a gloryouse thynge to passe and excell other in the superfluous and vayne ostentacion of 15 thynges. The whyche kynde of vice amonge the Vtopians can haue no place.

Next to the market places that I spake of stonde meate markettes, whether be brought not onlye all sortes of herbes, and the fruites of trees with breaed, 20 but also fishe, and all maner of iii. footed beastes, and wilde foule that be mans meate. But first the fylthynes and ordure therof is clene washed awaye in the runnyenge ryuer, without the cytie, in places appoynted, mete for the same purpose. From thence 25 the beastes (be) brought in kylled, and cleane wasshed by the handes of their bondemen. For they permytte not their frie cizezens to accustome there selfes to the killing of beastes; through the vse whereof they thinke that clemencie, the genteleste affection of our nature, 30 doth by litle and litle decaye and peryshe. Nother they suffer anye thynge that is fylthye, lothesome, or vnclenlye, to be brought into the cytie; least the ayre, by the stenche therof infected and corrupte, shoulde cause pestilente diseases. 35

Moreouer euery strete hath certeyne great large halles sett in equal distaunce one from an other, euerye one knowne by a seuerall name. In thies
halles dwell the Syphograuntes. And to every one of the same halles be apoynted xxx families, of ether side xv. The stewardes of every halle at a certayn houre come in to the meate markettes, where they receyue meate accordinge to the numbre of their 5 halles.

But first and chieflie of all, respect is had to the sycke that be cured in the hospitalles. For in the circuite of the citie, a litle without the walles, they haue .iii. hospitalles; so bygge, so wyde, so ample, and so lardge, that they may seme .iii. litle townes; which were deuised of that bygnes, partely to thintent the sycke, be they neuer so many in numbre, shuld not lye to thronge or strayte, and therfore uneseasly and incomodiously; and partely that they which were taken and holden with contagious diseases, suche as be wonte by infection to crepe from one to an other, myght be laid a part farre from the company of the residue. Thies hospitalles be so well apointed, and with al thynges necessary to health so furnished; and more ouer so diligent attendaunce through the continual presence of cunnyng phisitians is geuen, that though no man be sent thither against his will, yet notwithstandinge there is no sicke persone in all the citie, that had not rather lye there then at home in his owne house. When the stewarde of the sicke hath receiued suche meates as the phisitians haue prescribed, then the beste is equally deuided among the halles, according to the company of every one, sauing that there is had a respect to the prince, the byshop, the tranibours, and to ambassadours, and all straungers, if there be any, whiche be verye fewe and seldome. But they also, when they be there, haue certeyne houses apointed and prepared for them.

To thies halles at the set houres of dinner and supper cummith all the hole Siphograuntie or warde, warned by the noyse of a brasen trumpet; except such as be sicke in the hospitalles or els in their owne houses. Howe be it, no man is prohibited or forbid, after the halles be serued, to fetch home meate out of the market to his own house. For they knowe that no man wyl doo it without a cause resonable. For though no man be prohibited to dyne at home, yet no man doth it willynglye, because it is counted a pointe of small honestie. And also it were a follye to take the Payne to dresse a badde dyner at home, when they maye be welcome to good and fyne fare so nyghe hande at the hall. In this hal all vyle servise, all slauerie and drudgerye, with all laboursome toyle and busines, is done by bondemen. But the women of euery famelie by course haue the office and charge of cokerye, for sethinge and dressyng the meate, and orderyng al thinges therto belonging. They syt at iii. 15 tables or moo, accordyng to the numbre of their company. The men syt vpon the benche next the wall, and the women agaynst them on the other syde of the table; that, if anye sodeyne euell should chaunce to them, as many tymes happeneth to women with chylde, they maye ryse wythout trouble or disturb-aunce of anye body, and go thence into the nurcerie.

The nourceis sitte suerall alone with their yonge suckelinges in a certayne parloure apointed and deputed to the same purpose, neuer without fire and cleane water, nor yet without cradels; that when they wyll they maye laye downe the yong infauntes, and at their pleasure take them out of their swathinge clothes and holde them to the fyere, and refreshe them with playe. Eueiy mother is nource to her owne chylde, onles other death or syckenes be the let. When that chaunceth, the wyues of the Siphograuntes quyckelye prouyde a nource. And that is not harde to be done. For they that can doo it do proffer themselvses to no servise so gladlye as to that. Because that there thys kynde of pitie is muche praysed; and the chylde that is nouryshed euuer after taketh his nource for his owne naturall mother. Also amonge the nourceis syt all the chyldren that be vnder the age of v. yeares. All the other children of both kyndes, aswell boyes as gyrles, that be vnder the age of marryage, doo other serue at the tables, or els if they be to yonge thereto, yet they stande by with meruelous silence. That 5 whiche is giuen to them from the table they eate, and other seuerall dynner tyme they haue none. The Siphograunt and his wife sitteth in the middes of the highe table, forasmuche as that is counted the honerablest place, and because from thence al the hole 10 comanye is in their syght. For that table standeth ouer wharte the ouer ende of the halle. To them be ioyned ii. of the ancietnest and eldest. For at every table they syt iii. at a meesse. But if there be a church standing in that Siphograuntie, or warde, then 15
the priest and his wyfe sitteth with the Siphograunte, as chiefe in the company. On both sydes of them sytte yonge men, and nexte vnto them agayne olde men. And thus throughge out all the house equall of age be sette together, and yet be myxte with vnequall 20 ages. Thys they saye was ordeyned, to the intent that the sage grauitie and reuerence of the elders should kepe the yongers from wanton licence of wordes and behauior; for as muche as nothyng can be so secretly spoken or done at the table, but either they 25 that syt on the one syde or on the other must nedes perceiue it. The disshes be not set downe in ordre from the first place, but all the old men (whoes places be marked with som speciall token to be knowen) be first serued of there meate, and then the residue 30 equally. The old men deuide their dainties, as they think best, to the yonger that sit of both sides them.
Thus the elders be not defrauded of their dewe honoure, and neuerthelesse equall commoditie commeth to euery one.

They begin euerye dynner and supper of reading sumthing that perteineth to good maners and vertue.
But it is short, becausw no man shalbe greued therwith.
Here of theelders take occasion of honest communication, but nother sad nor vnpleasaunt. Howbeit, they do not spend all the hole dyner time themselfes with long and tedious talkes; but they gladly here also the yong men; yea and do purposly prouoke them to talke, to thentent that they maye haue a profe of every mans wit and towardnes or disposition to vertue, which commonly in ye liberte of feasting doth shew and vtter it selfe. There dyners be verye short; but there suppers be sumwhat longer; because that after dynner followeth laboure; after supper sleape and naturall reste; whiche they thynke to be of no more strength the and efficacy to holsome and healthfull digestion. No supper is passed without musicke; nor their bankettes lacke no conceytes nor ionckettes. They burne swete gummies and speces for perfumes and pleasaunt smelles, and sprincle about swete oyntmentes and waters; yea they leaue nothyng vndone that maketh for the cheryng of the company. For they be muche enclyned to this opinion: to thinke no kynde of pleasure forbidden, wherof cummeth no harme.

Thus therfore and after this sorte they lyue togethers in the citie; but in the contrey they that dwell alone, farre from anye neyghbours, do dyne and .suppe at home in their own houses. For no famelie there lacketh anye kynde of victualles, as from whome cummeth all that the cytezens eate and lyue bye.
OF UTOPIA

[Chapter VI]

Of their journeyenge or traualynge a brode, with dyuers other matters cunningly reasoned and wittily discussed.

But if any be desierous to vysite other their fryndes that dwel in an other Cytie, or to see the place it selfe, they easelye obteyne lycence of their Siphograuntes and Tranibores, oneles there bee som profitable let. No man goeth out alone; but a companye is sente furth to gether with their princes letters, whiche do testifie that they haue licence to go that iorney, and prescribe also the day of their retourne. They haue a wageyn geuen them, with a common bondman, whiche driueth the oxen and taketh charge of them. But onles they haue women in their company, they sende home the wageyn againe, as an impediment and a let. And though they carrye nothyng furth with them, yet in all their iorney they lacke nothing. For wheresoeuer they come they be at home. If they tary in a place longer then one day, than there euery one of them falleth to his own occupation, and be very gentilly enterteined of the workmen and companies of the same craftes. If any man of his owne head and without leaue walke out of his precinct and boundes, taken without the princes lettres, he is brought again for a fugitive or a runaway with great shame and rebuke, and is sharpely punished. If he be taken in that faulte agayne, he is punished with bondage.

If anye be desierous to walke a brode into the fieldes, or into the contrey that belongeth to the same citie that he dwelleth in, obteynyng the good will of his father, and the consent of his wife, he is not prohibited. But into what part of the contrey soever he cummeth, he hath no meat geuin him untill he haue wrought out his forenones taske, or els dispatched so muche worke as there is wonte to be wrought befor 5 supper. Obseruing this lawe and condition, he may go whether he well within the boundes of his owne citie. For he shalbe no les profitable to the citie, then if he were within it.

Now yow see howe litle libertie they haue to løyter; how they can haue no cloke or pretence to ydelnes. There be nether wyn tauernes, nor ale houses, nor stewes, nor any occasion of ujce or wickednes, no lurking corners, no places of wicked councelles or vnlawfull assemblies; but they be in the present sight, and vnder the iyes of euery man; so that of necessitie they must other applie their accustomed labours, or else recreate themselves with honest and laudable pastymes.

This fassion being vsed among the people, they must of necessitie haue store and plentie of all things.
And seing they be al therof parteners equally, therfore cane no man there be poore or nedye. In the councel of Amaurot (whether, as I sayde, euery citie sendeth
.iii. men a pece yearly), assone as it is perfectly knownen of what thynge there is in euery place plentie, and agayne what thynge be skant in anye place; incontinent the lacke of the one is performed and fylled vp with the aboundaunce of the other. And this they doo frelye without any benifite, takyng nothing agayn of them to whom the things is geuen; but those cyties that haue geuen of their store to anye other cytie that lacketh, requerynge nothynge agayne of the same cytie, do take suche things as they lacke of an other cytie, to whome they gaue nothynge.

So the hole Ilande is as it were one famelie or housholde.

But when they haue made sufficiencte prouision of stoore for them selfes (whiche they thinke not doone untill they haue prouyded for two yeares followynge, bicause of the vncertentie of the neste yeares proffe), then of those thynges wherof they haue abundaunce they carry furthe into other contreis greate plenty; as grayne, honnye, wulle, flaxe, woode, madder, purple die felles, waxe, tallowe, lether, and liuyng beastes. And the seuenth part of all thies thynges they gyue franckely and frelye to the poore of that contrey. The resydewe they sell at a reasonable and meane price. By this trade of traffique or marchandise, they bring into their own contrey not only great plentie of golde and siluer, but also all suche thynges as they lacke at home, whych is almoste nothynge but Iron. And by reason they haue longe vsed thys trade, nowe they haue more abundaunce of thies thynges then any man wyll beleue. Nowe, therfore, they care not whether they sell for reddye moneye, or els vpon truste to be paide at a daye, and to haue the most part in debtes. But in so doyng they neuer followe the credence of pryuat men, but the assureaunce or warrauantise of the hole citye, by instrumentes and writings made in that behalfe accordinglye. When the daye of paymente is come and expyred, the cytye gathereth vp the debte of the priuate dettours, and putteth it into the common boxe, and so long hath the vse and profyttte of it, vntyll the vtopians their creditours demaunde it. The mooste parte of it they neuer aske. For that thyng whyche is to them no profyte, to take it from other to whom it is profyttable, they thinke it no righte nor conscience. But yf the case so stande, that they must lende parte of that money to an other people, then they requyre theyre debte; or when they haue warre. For the whyche purpose onelye they keap at home al the treasure which they haue, to be holpen and socoured by yt other in extreame ieopardyes, or in suddeyne daungers; but especyallye and chieflie to hierewyth, and that for unreasonable great wayges, strange soldyours. For they hadde rather put strangers in jeopardy then theyre owne contreye men; knowinge that for moneye enoughe their enemies themselves manye tymes may be bowghte and solde, or els throughge 5 treason be sette togetheres by the eares emonge themselves. For thys cause they kype an inestymable treasure; but yet not as a treasure; but so they haue yt and vse yt as in good faythe I am ashamede to shewe, fearynge that my wordes shal not be beleued. 1
And thys I haue more cause to feare, for that I knowe howe dyffucultlye and hardelye I meselfe wolde beleued an othere man tellynge the same, yf I hadde not presentlye scene yt wyth myne owne iyes. For yt muste nedes be, that howe farre a thing is dissonaunt and disagreinge from the guyse and trade of the hearers, so farre shall yt be owte of theyr beleffe. Howe be yt, a wyse and indyfferente estymer of thynges wyll not greatly marueil perchaunce, seing al theyre other lawes and customes doo so muche dyffere 2 from owres, yf the vse also of golde and syluer amonge them be applyed rather to theyr owne fassyons then to owers. I meane, in that they occupye not moneye themselves, but kepe yt for that chaunce; whyche as yt maye happen, so yt maye be that yt shall neuer 2 come to passe.
In the meane tyme golde and syluer, whereof moneye ys made, they doo soo vse, as none of them dothe more estyme yt, then the verye nature of the thynge deserueth. And then who dothe not playnlye 3 see howe farre yt ys vnder Iron? as wythoute the whyche men canne no better lyue then withowte fyere and water; whereas to golde and syluer nature hath the geuen no vse that we may not wel lacke, yf that the folly of men hadde not sette it in hygher estymacion for the rarenes sake. But, of the contrary parte, nature, as a moste tender and louynge mother, hath placed the beste and moste necessarye thynges open a brode; as the ayere, the water, and the earth it selfe; and hath remoued and hydde farthest from vs vayne and vnprofytable thynges. Therfore yf thies metalles among them shoulde be fast locked vp in some tower, it myghte be suspected that the prynce and the cowncell (as the people is euer foolishly ymagininge) intended by some subtyltye to deceaue the commons, and to take some profette of it to themselves. Furthermore, if they should make therof plat and such other finely and cunningly wrought stuffe; yf at anye tyme they shoulde haue occasyon to breake it, and melte it agayne, and therwyth to paye their souldiours wages; they see and perceiue very well that men wolde be lothe to parte from those thynges that they ons begonne to haue pleasure and delyte in.

To remedye all thys, they haue fownde owt a meanes, which, as it is agreable to al their other lawes and customes, so it is from ours, where golde is so muche set by and so delygently kepte, very farre discrepant and repugnaunt; and therfore vncredible, but only to them that be wise. For where as they eate and drinke in earthen and glasse vesselles, which in dede be curiously and properlie made, and yet be of very small value; of gold and siluer they make commonlye chamber pottes, and other like vesselles that serue for moste vile vses, not only in their common halles, but in euery mans priuate house. Furthermore of the same mettalles they make greate cheynes with fetters and giues, wherein they tye their bondmen. Finally, who so euere for any offence be infamed, by their eares hange ringes of golde; vpon their fingers they were ringes of golde, and about their neckes chaynes of gold; and in conclusion their heades be tiede about with golde. Thus, by all meanes that may be, they procure to haue gold and siluer emong them in reproche and infamy. And therfore thies metalles, which other nations do as greuously and sorroufully forgo, as in a maner from their owne lines: if they should all togethers at ones be taken from the vtopians, no man there wold thinke that he had lost the worth of one farthing.

They gather also peerles by the sea side, and Diamondes and Carbuncles upon certein rockes; and yet they seke not for them; but by chaunce finding them they cutt and polish them. And therwith they decke their yonge infanates. Which, like as in the first yeares of their childhood they make much and be fond and proud of such ornamentes, so when they be a litle more growen in yeares and discretion, perceiving that none but children do were such toies and trifeles, they lay them awaye euens of theyre owne shamefastenes, wythoute anye biddyng of their parents: euens as oure children, when they waxe bygge, doo caste awaye nuttes, brouches, and puppettes. Therfore thythes lawes and customes, whych be so farre dyfferente from all outhere natyons, howe diuers fanseys also and myndes they doo cause, dydde I neuer so playnlye perceau, as in the Ambassadoures of the Anemolians.

Thyes Ambassadoures came to Amaurote whyles I was there. And bycause they came to entreat of greate and weighty matters, those .iii. citizeins a pece out of euery city were commen thether before them. But al the Ambassadours of the next contreis, which had bene there before, and knewe the fassions and maners of the Vtopians, amonge whome they perceaued no honoure geuen to sumptuous and costelye apparrell, silkes to be contemned, golde also to be enfamed and reprochefull, were wont to come thether in very homely and simple apparrell. But the Anemolianes, bicause they dwell farre thence, and had verye litle acquain-taunce with them, hearinge that they were al appareld a like, and that verye rudelye and homelye, thynkynge them not to haue the thynges whyche they dydde not weare, beynge therefore more proud then wise, determined in the gorgiousnes of their apparel to represent very goddes, and wyth the bright shynyngge and glisteringe of their gaye clothinge to dasell the eyes of the silie poore vtopians. So ther came in iii. Ambassadours with C. seruauntes all appered in chauengeable colours; the moost of them in silkes; the Ambassadours themselfes (for at home in their owne countrey they were noble men) in cloth of gold, with great cheines of gold, with gold hanging at their cares, with gold ringes vpon their fingers, with brouches and aglettes of gold vpon their cappes, which glistered ful of peerles and pretious stones; to be short, trimmed and aduorned with al those thinges, which emong the vtopians were other the punnishement of bondmen, or the reproche of infamed persones, or elles trifels for yonge children to playe with all. Therfore it wolde haue done a man good at his harte to haue sene howe proudelye they displayed theire pecockes fethers; howe muche they made of their paynted sheathes; and howe loftely they sett forth and aduaunced them selfes, when they compared their gallaunte apparrell with the poore rayment of the vtopians. For al the people were swarmed furth into the stretes. And on the other side it was no lesse pleasure to consider howe muche they were deceaued, and how farre they missed of their purpose; being contrary wayes taken then they thought they shoulde haue bene. For to the yyes of all the vtopians, excepte very fewe, whiche had bene in other contreyes for some resonalbe cause, al that gorgeousnes of apparel seemed shamefull and reprochefull; in so much that they most reuerently saluted the vylest and most abiect of them for lordes; passing over the Ambassadours themselfes without any honour; iudging them, be their wearing of golden cheynes, to be bonde-men. Yea, you shuld haue sene children also that had caste away their peerles and pretious stones, when they sawe the like sticking vpon the Ambassadours cappes, digge and pushe their mothers vnder the sides, sayinge thus to them: 'Loke, mother, how great a lubbor doth yet were peerles and pretious stonees, as though he were a litel child still.' But the mother, yea, and that also in good earnest: 'peace, sone,' saith she; 'I thynk he be some of the Ambassadours fooles.'

Some fownde fawte at theire golden cheynes, as to no vse nor purpose; beynge so small and weake, that a bondeman myghte easelye breake them; and agayne so wyde and large, that, when it pleased him, he myght cast them of, and runne awaye at lybertye whether he wolde.

But when the Ambassadoures hadde bene there a daye or .ii., and sawe so greate abundaunce of gold so lyghtelye estymed, yea, in no lesse reproche then yt was wyth them in honour; and, besydes that, more golde in the cheynes and gyues of one fugytyue bondeman, then all the costelye ornamentes of them .iii. was worth; they beganne to abate theyre currage, and for verye shame layde awaye all that gorgyouse arraye wherof theye were so prowde; and specyallye when they hadde talkede famlyerlye wyth the Vtopyans, and hadde learnede all theyre fassyons and opynyons. For they marueyle that annye men be soo folyshe as to haue delyte and pleasure in the glysterynge of a lytyll tryfelynge stone, whyche maye beholde annye of the starres, or elles the soone yt selfe; or that annye man ys so madde as to counte him selfe the nobler for the smaller or fyner threde of wolle, whyche selfe same woll (be it nowe in neuere so fyne a sponne threde) dyde ones a shepe weare; and yet was she all that time no other thing then a shepe.

They marueyle also that golde, whyche of the owne nature is a thynge so vnprofytable, is nowe emonge all people in soo hyghe estymatyon, that man hym selfe, by whom, yea and for the vse of whome, yt ys so muche sett by, ys in muche lesse estymatyon then the golde yt selfe. In so muche that a lumpyshe blockehedded churle, and whyche hathe no more wytte then an asse, yea, and as full of noughtenes and folyshenes, shall haue neuertheles many wyse and good men in subiectyon and bondage, onlye for thys, bycause he hathe a greate heape of golde. Whyche yt should be taken from hym by annye fortune, or by some subtyll wyle of the lawe, (which no lesse then fortune doth raise vp the lowe, and plucke downe the high) and be guen to the most vile slaue and abiect dreuell of all his housholde, then shortly after he shall goo into the seruice of his seruaunt, as an augmentation or an ouerplus besyd his money. But they much more marueill at and detest the madenes of them, whyche to those riche men, in whose debte and daunger they be not, do giue almoste diuine honowres, for non other consideration, but bicause they be riche; and yet knowing them to be suche nigeshe penny fathers, that they be sure, as long as they liue, not the worthe of one farthinge of that heape of gold shall come to them.

Thies and such like opinions haue they conceaued, partely by education, beinge brought vp in that common wealth, whose lawes and customes be farre different from thies kindes of folly, and partely by good litterature and learning. For though ther be not many in euery citye, whiche be exempte and discharge of all other laboures, and appointed only to learninge; that is to saye, suche in whome euen from theire very childhode they haue perceaued a singuler towards, a fyne witte, and a minde apte to good learning; yet all in their childhode be instructe in learninge. And the better parte of the people, bothe men and women, throughe owte all theire hole lyffe, doo bestowe in learninge those spare howres, which we sayde they haue vacante from bodelye laboures. They be taughte learninge in theire owne natyue tonge. For yt is bothe copious in woordes, and also pleasaunte to the eare, and for the utteraunce of a mans minde verye perfecte and sure. The mooste parte of all that syde of the wordle vseth the same langage; sauinge that amonge the Vtopians yt is fyneste and puryste; and accordynge to the dyuersytye of the contreys yt ys dyuerslye alterede.

Of all thyes Philosophers, whose names be here 5 famous in thys parte of the wordle to vs knowen, before owre cummyynge thether, nott as muche as the fame of annye of them was comen amongeth them; and yett in Musycke, Logycke, Arythmetyke, and Geometrye, they haue fownde owte in a manner all that oure auncvente Philosophers haue tawghte. But as they in all thynges be almoste equall to our olde auncyente clerkes, so our newe Logiciens in subyll inuentyons haue farre passed and gone beyonde them. For they haue not deuysed one of all those rules of restryctyons, amplyfycatyons, and supposytyons, very wittelye inuented in the small Logycalles, whyche heare oure children in euerye place do learne. Furthermore they were neuer yet able to fynde out the seconde intentyons; in so muche that none of them all coulde euuer see man hymselfe in commen, as they call hym; though he be (as yow knowe) bygger then euuer was annye gyaunte, yea, and poyned to of vs euen wyth our fynger. But they be in the course of the starres, and the mouynges of the heauenlye spheres, verye expert and cunnynge. They haue also wyttelye ex-cogytated and diuised instrumentes of diuers fassyons, wherin is exactly comprehended and conteyned the mouynges and sytuatyons of the sonne, the moone, and of all the other starres which appere in theyre horyzon. But as for the amityes and dissentyons of the planettes, and all that deceytyfull diuynatyon by the starres, they neuer asmuch as dreamed therof. Raynes, windes, and other courses of tempestes they knowe before by certein tokens, which they haue learned by long vse and observation. But of the causes of all thyes thinges, and of the ebbinge, flowinge, and saltenes of the sea, and fynallye of the orygynall begynnyng and nature of haue[n] and of the wordle, they holde partelye the same opynyons that our olde philosophers holde; and partelye, as our philosophers varye emonge themselves, so they also, whiles they bringe new reasons of thynges, doo disagree from all 5 them, and yet emonge themselves in all poyntes they doo not accorde.

In that part of philosophie which intreateth of manners and vertue, theire reasons and opynyons agree wyth ours. They dyspute of the good qualytyes of 10 - the sowle, of the body, and of fortune; and whether the name of goodnes maye be applied to all thies, or onlie to the endowmentes and giftes of the sowle. They reason of vertue and pleasure. But the chiefe and principall question is in what thynge, be yt one 15 or moo, the felicytye of man consisteth. But in thys poynte theye seme almooste to muche geuen and enclyned to the opinion of them whiche defende pleasure; wherin they determine other all or the chieffeste parte of mans felicytye to reste. And (whyche 20 is more to bee marueled at) the defence of thys soo deyntyne and delycate an opynyon they fetche even from theyre graue, sharpe, bytter, and rygorous relygyon. For they neuer dyspute of felicytye or blessednes, but they ioyne to the reasons of Philosophye 25. ceretyne prynçyple taken owte of relygyon; wythoute the whyche, to the inuestygyon of trewe felicytye, theye thynke reason of yt selfe weak and vnperfecte. Thoose prynçyple be thyes and suche lyke: That the sowle ys immortall, and by the bountifull goodnes of 30 God ordeyned to felicitie: That to our vertues and good deades rewardes be apoynted after this lyfe, and to our euell deades punyshementes. Though thies be perteynyng to religion, yet they thynke it mete that they shoulde be beleued and graunted by profes of 35 reason. But if thies principles were condemnped and dysanulled, then without anye delaye they pronounce no man to be so folish, whiche woulde not do all hys diligence and endeoure to obteyne pleasure be ryght or wronge, onlye auoydynge this inconuenieniece, that the lesse pleasure should not be a let or hynderaunce to the bygger; or that he laboured not for that pleaure whiche would bryng after it displeasure, greese, and sorrowe. For they iudge it extreame madnes to folowe sharpe and peinful vertue, and not only to bannyshe the pleasure of lyfe, but also wylyngly to suffre grief without any hope of proffyt thereof. For what proffyt can there be, if a man, when he hath passed ouer all hys lyfe vnpleasauntly, that is to say, wretchedlye, shall haue no rewarde after hys death? But now, syr, they thynke not felicitie to reste in all pleasure, but onlye in that pleasure that is good and honest; and that hereto, as to perfet blessednes, our nature is allured and drawen euyn of vertue; wherto only they that be of the contrary opinion do attribute felicitie. For they define vertue to be a life ordered according to nature; and that we be hereunto ordeined of god; and that he doth followe the course of nature, which in desiering and refusyng thynges is ruled by reason. Furthermore, that reason doth chieflie and pryncipallye kendle in men the loue and veneration of the deuyne maiestie; of whoes goodnes it is that we be, and that we be in possibiJitie to attayne felicite. And that, secondarely, it moueth and prouoketh vs to leade our lyfe out of care in ioye and myrth, and to helpe all other, in respecte of the sosiete of nature, to obteyne the same. For there was neuer man so earnest and paynefull a follower of vertue, and hater of pleasure, that woulde so inioyne you laboures, watchinges, and fastinges, but he would also exhort you to ease and lighten to your powre the lacke and myserye of others; praysyng the same as a dede of humanitie and pitie. Then if it be a poynte of humanitie for man to bryng health and conforte to man, and speciallye (whiche is a vertue moste peculiarye belongynge to man) to mitigate and assuage the grief of others, and by takyng from them the sorowe and heuynes of lyfe, to restore them to ioye, that is to saye to pleasure; whye maye it not then be sayd that nature doth prouoke euerye man to doo the same to hymselfe?

For a ioyfull lyfe, that is to saye, a pleasantaunt lyfe, 5 is other euell; and if it be so, then thou shouldest not onlye helpe no man therto, but rather, as muche as in the lieth, helpe all men from it, as noysome and hurtefull; or els, if thou not onlye mayste, but also of dewtie art bounde to procure it to others, whye maye it not then be sayd that nature doth prouoke euerye man to so doo the same to hymselfe? For when natur biddeth the to be good and gentle to other, she commaundeth the not to be cruell and vngentle to the selfe. Therfore euen very nature (saye they) pre- 15 scribith to vs a ioyfull lyfe, that is to saye, pleasure, as the ende of all our operations. And they defyne vertue to be lyfe ordered accordyng to the prescript of nature. But in that that nature dothe allure and prouoke men one to healpe an other to lyue merilye 20 (whiche suerlye she doth not without a good cause; for no man is so farre aboue the lot of mans state or condicion, that nature doth carke and care for hym only, whiche equallye fauoureth all that be comprehended vnder the communion of one shape, 25 forme, and fassion), verely she commaundeth the to vse diligent circumspection, that thou do not so seke for thine owne commodities, that thou procure others incommodities.

Wherfore their opinion is, that not onlye coue- 30 nauntes and bargaynes made amonge priuate men ought to be well and faythfullye fulfyllde, obserued, and kept, but also commen lawes; whiche other a good prince hath iustly publyshed, or els the people, nother oppressed with tyrannye, nother deceaued by fraude 35 and gyell, hath by their common consent constitute and ratyfied, concernyng the particion of the com- modities of lyfe,—that is to say, the matter of pleasure.
Thies lawes not offendid, it is wysdome that thou looke to thyne own wealth. And to do the same for the common wealth is no lesse then thy duetie, if thou bearest any reuerent loue or any naturall zeale and affection to thy native contrey. But to go about to let an other man of his pleasure, whiles thou procurest thyne owne, that is open wrong. Contrary wyse, to withdrawe somethynge from they selfe to geue to other, that is a pointe of humanitie and gentynes; whiche neuer taketh a waye so muche commoditie, as it bryngeth agayne. For it is recompensed with the returne of benefytes; and the conscience of the good dede, with the remembrance of the thankefull loue and beneuolence of them to whom thou hast done it, doth brynge more pleasure to thy mynde, then that whiche thou hast withholden from thy selfe could haue brought to the bodye. Finallye (which to a godly disposed and a religious mind is easie to be persuaded), God recompenseth the gifte of a short and small pleasure with great and euerlastinge ioye. Therfore, the matter diligentlie wayde and considered, thus they thinke: that all our actions, and in them the vertues themselfes, be referred at the last to pleasure, as their ende and felicitie.

Pleasure they call euery motion and state of the bodie or mynde, wherin man hath naturally delectation. Appetite they ioyne to nature, and that not without a good cause. For like as not only the senses, but also right reason, coueteth whatsoeuer is naturally pleasauent; so that it may be gotten without wrong or iniurie, not letting or debarring a greater pleasur, nor causing painful labour; euen so those thinges that men by vaine ymagination, do fayne against nature to be pleasauent (as though it lay in their powre to chaunge the thinges as they do the names of thinges), al suche pleasurs they beleue to be of so small helpe and furtheraunce to felicitie, that they counte them great let and hinderaunce; because that, in whom they haue ones taken place, all his mynde they possesse with a false opinion of pleasure; so that there is no place left for true and naturall delectacions. For there be manye thynges, whiche of their owne nature conteyne no plesauntnes; yea the moste part of them muche grief and sorrow; and yet, through the peruerse and malicious flickering inticementes of lewde and vnhoneste desyres, be taken not only for speciall and souereigne pleasures, but also be counted amonge the chiefe causes of life.

In this counterfeit kinde of pleasure they put them that I speake of before; which, the better gown they haue on, the better men they thynke themselfes. In the whiche thynge they doo twyse erre. For they be no lesse deceaued in that they thynke their gowne the better, than they be in that they thinke themselfes the better. For if you consider the profitable use of the garmente, whye shoulde wulle of a fyner sponne threde be thought better, then the wul of a course sponne threde? Yet they, as though the one dyd passe the other by nature, and not by their mistakyng, auaunce themselfes and thinke the price of their owne persones therby greatly encreased. And therfore the honoure, whiche in a course gowne they durste not haue lokyd for, they require as it were of dewtie for their fyner gownes sake. And if they be passed by without reuerence, they take it angerlye and disdaynfully.

And agayne is it not a lyke madnes to take a pride in vayne and vnprofitable honoures? For what naturall or trewe pleasure doest thou take of an other mans bare hede or bowed knees? Will thys ease the payne of thy knees, or remedye the phrensie of thy heade? In this ymage of counterfeyte pleasure, they be of a maruelous madnes, which for the opinion of nobilitie reioyse muche in their owne conceite, because it was their fortune to come of suche auncetours, whoes stocke of longe tyme hath bene counted ryche.
(for nowe nobilitie is nothyng elles), specially ryche in landes. And though their auncetours left them not one fote of lande, or els they themselfes haue pyssed it agaynste the walles, yet they thynke themselfes not the lesse noble therefore of one heare.

In thys numbere also they counte them that take pleasure and delyte (as I saide) in gemmes and precious stones, and thynke themselfes almoste goddes, if they chaunce to gette an excellent one; speciallye of that kynde whyche in that tyme of their owne contreye men is had in hyghest estimation. For one kynde of stone kepeth not hys pryce styll in all contreis, and at all tymes. Nor they bye them not but taken out of the golde and bare; no, nor so nother, before they haue made the seller to sweare that he wyll warraunte and assure it to be a trewe stone and no counterfeyt geme. Suche care they take lest a counterfet stone shoulde deceaue their eyes in the steade of a right stone. But whye shouldest thou not take euuen as mucche pleasure in beholdeynge a counterfette stone, whiche thyne eye cannot discerne from a ryght stone? They should both be of lyke value to the, euuen as to a blynde man. What shall I saye of them that kepe superfluous ryches, to take delectacion only in the beholdeynge, and not in the vse or occupyenge therof? Do they take trewe pleasure, or els be they deceaued with false pleasure? Or of them that be in a contrary vice, hydynge the golde whiche they shall neuer occupie, nor peraduenture neuer see more; and, whiles they take care leaste they shall leese it, do leese it in dede? For what is it elles, when they hyde it in the grounde, takynge it bothe from their owne vse, and perchaunce from all other mens also? And yet thou, when thou haste hidde thye treasure, as one out of all care, hoppest for ioye. The whyche treasure if it shoulde chaunce to bee stooled, and thou, ignoraunt of the thefte, shouldest dye tenne yeares after; all that tenne yeares space that thou lyuedest, after thy money was stolen, what matter was it to the whether it hadde bene taken a waye, or els sauffe as thou lefteste it? Truelye bothe wayes lyke lyved came to the.

To thyes so foolyshe pleasures they ioyne dycers, whose madnes they knowe by heare say and not by vse; hunters also, and hawkers. For what pleasure is there (saye they) in castynge the dice upon a table; which thu hast done so often, that if theire were anye pleasure in it, yet the ofte vse myghte make the werye therof? Or what delite can there be, and not rather dyspleasure, in hearynge the barkynge and howlynge of dogges? Or what greater pleasure is there is to be felt, when a dogge followeth an hare, then when a dogge followeth a dogge? for one thynge is done in both; that is to saye, runninge; if thou haste pleasure therein. But if the hope of slaughter, and the expectation of tearynge in pieces the beaste dothe please the, thou shouldest rather be moued with pitie to see a seely innocent hare murdered of a dogge; the weake of the stronger; the fearefull of the fearece; the innocente of the cruell and vnmercyfull. Therefore all thys exercys of huntyng, as a thynge vnworthye to be vsed of free men, the Vtopians haue reiected to their bochers; to the whiche crafe (as wee sayde before) they appointe ther bondmen. For they counte huntyng the loweste, vyyleste, and moste abiecte parte of bocherye; and the other partes of it more profytt able and more honeste, as whiche do brynge muche more commoditie; and doo kyll beastes onylye for necessytie. Where as the hunter seketh nothyng but pleasure of the seely and wofull beastes slaughter and murder. The whiche pleasure in beholdyng death they thynke dothe ryse in the very beastes, other of a cruell affection of mynde, or els to be chaunged in continuance of time into crueltie, by longe vse of so cruell a pleasure. Thies therfore and all suche lyke, which be innumerable, though the common sorte of people doth take them for pleasures, yet they, seyng there is no naturall pleasautnes in them, do playnelye determine them to haue no affinitie with trewe and right pleasure. For as touchyng that they do commonlye moue the sence with delectacion (whiche semeth to be a worke of pleasure) thyse doth nothing diminishe their opinion. For not the nature of the thynge, but there peruerse and lewde custome is the cause hereof; whiche causeth them to accepte bitter or sowre thinges for swete thinges; euen as women with childe, in their viciate and corrupt taste, thinke pitche and tallowe sweter then anye honney. Howbeit no mans iudgement, depraued and corrupte, other by sickenes or by custome, can chaunge the nature of pleasure, more then it can doo the natur of other thinges. 15

They make diuers kyndes of trew pleasures. For som they attribute to the soule, and som to the bodye. To the soule they gyue intellygence, and that delectation that cummeth of the contemplation of truth. Here vnto is ioyned the pleasaunt remembraunce of the good lyfe past.

The pleasure of the bodye they deuide into ii. partes. The first is when delectation is sensibly felte and perceaued: whiche many times chaunceth by the renewing and refresshyng of thoes partes which owre naturall heate drieth vp: thyse cummeth by meate and drynke: and sumtymes whyles those thynges be voided, wherof is in the body ouer great abundaunce. This pleasure is felte when wee doo our naturall easemente, or when we be doynge the acte of generation, or when the ytchyng of anye parte is eased with rubbynge or scratchynge. Sumtimes pleasure riseth, exhibitinge to any membre nothing that it desireth, nor taking from it any payne that it feeleth; which for all that tikleth and moueth our senses with a certein secrete efficacy, but with a manifest motion, and turneth them to it; as is that which cummeth of musicke.
The second part of bodily pleasure they say is that which consisteth and resteth in the quiete and uprigh state of the body. And that truelye is every mans owne propre health, entermyngled and dyssturbed wyth no grieffe. For thys, yt be not letted nor assaulted with no greiffe, is delectable of yt selfe, though yt be moued wyth no externall or outwarde pleasure. For though it be not so plain and manysteste to the sense, as the redye luste of eatynge and drynckynge, yet neuerthelesse manye take it for the chyfeste pleasure. All the Vtopians graunte yt to be a ryghte greate pleasure, and as you wolde saye the foundatyon and grownde of all pleasures; as whyche euene alone ys able to make the state and condytyon of lyffe delectable and pleasante; and, yt beynge ones taken awaye, there ys no place lefte for annye pleasure. For to be wythowte greysf, not hauinge health, that they call vnsensybylyte and not pleasure. The Vtopians haue longe agoo reiected and condempned the opynyon of them, whyche sayde that stedfastlye and quyete healthe (for thys questyon also hath bene dylygentlye debated emonge them) owghte not therefore to be cownted a pleasure, bicause they saye yt can not be presentlye and sensybylye perceaued and felte by some outwarde motion. But, of the contrarye parte, nowe they agree alomoste all in thys, that healthe ys a moste souereyagne pleasure. For seinge that in syckenes (saye they) is grieffe, which is a mortal ennemie to pleasure, euene as sicknes is to health, why shuld not then pleasure be in the quietnes of health? For they say it maketh nothing to thys matter, whether you saye that sickenes is a greife, or that in sickenes is greife; for all cummeth to one purpose. For whether health be a pleasure it selfe, or a necessary cause of pleasure, as fyre is of heate, truelye bothe wayes it foloweth, that they cannot be without pleasure that be in perfyt healthe. Furthermore, whyles we eate (saye they), then health, whiche began to be appayred, fyghteth by the helpe of foode against hunger. In the whych fighte whyles healthe by lytle and lytle getteth the vpper hande, that same procedyng, and (as ye would say) that onwardnes to the wonte strengthe mynistreth that pleasure, wherbye wee be so refresshed. 5 Health therefore, whiche in the conflycte is ioyfull, shall it not bee merye when it hathe gotten the victory? But as sone as it had recovered thee pristyn-ate strengthe, whyche thynge onelye in all the fyghte it coueted, shall it incontinent be astonied? Nor shall 10 it not knowe nor imbracce the owne wealthe and goodnes? For that it is sayed healthe can not be felte, this, they thinke, is nothing trew. For what man wakynge, say they, feleth not hymselfe in health, but he that is not? Is there annye man so possessed 15 wyth stonyse insensibilitie, or with the sleping sicknesses, that he wyll not graunt health to be acceptable to hym and delectable? But what other thing is delectation, than that whiche by an other name is called pleasure?

They imbracce chieflye the pleasures of the mind.
For them they counte the chiefist and most principall of all. The cheyfe parte of them they thinke doth come of the exercise of vertue, and conscience of good lyffe. Of thys pleasures that the boddye ministreth 25 they geue the preemynence to helth. For the delyte of eating and drinkinge, and whateuer hath anny like pleasauntnes, they determyne to be pleasures muche to be desiered, but no other wayes than for healthes sake. For suche thynges of theyre owne propre nature 30 be not pleasante, but in that they resyste syckenes preuelye stealynge one. Therefore, lyke as yt ys a wyse mans parte rather to auoyde syckenes, then to wyshe for medycynes, and rather to dryue away and put to fyghte carefull greyffes, then to call for com-forte; so yt ys much better not to neade thyss kynde of pleasure, then in sealynge the contrarye greyffe to be eased of the same. The whyche kynde of pleasure yf annye man take for hys felycyte, that man muste nedes graunte, that then he shall be in mooste,felycyte, yf he lyue that lyffe whyche ys ledde in contyn-uall honger, thurste, itchynghe, eatynge, drynkynge, scratchynghe, and rubbynghe. The whyche lyffe howe 5 not ony Ye foule yt is, but also myserable and wretched, who perceauethe not? Thyes dowteles be the baseste pleasures of all, as vnpure, and vnperfecte. For they neuer cum but accompanied wyth their contrary greiffes.
As with the pleasure of eatinge is ioyned hunger, and 10 that after no very egal sort. For of thies ii. the gryeffe is bothe the more vehement, and also of longer continuaunce. For it rysethe before the pleasure, and endeth not vntyll the pleasure dye wyth it.

Wherfore such pleasures they think not greatly to 15 be set by, but in that they be necessary. Howbeit they haue delite also in thies, and thankfully knouledge the tender loue of mother nature, which with most pleasaunt delectation allureth her children to that, which of necessitye they be druen often vse. For 20 how wretched and miserable should our liffe bo7 if thies daily greffes of hunger and thrust coulde not be dreuen away, but with bitter potions, and sower medicynes; as the other deseases be, where with we be seldomer troubled? But bewtye, strengthe, nemblenes, thies, as peculiare and pleasaunte giftes of nature, they make muche of. But those pleasures which be receaued by the eares, the iyes, and the nose; which nature willeth to be proper and peculiare to man (for no other kind of liuing beastes doth behold the fayrenes 30 and the bewtie of the worlde, or is moued with anyy respect of sauours, but only for the diversiety of meates, nother perceaueth the concordaunt and discordante distaunces of soundes and tunes) thies pleasures (I say) they accept and allowe, as certein pleasaunt reioysinges 35 of liffe. But in all thinges thys cautell they vse, that a lesse pleasure hinder not a bigger, and that the pleasur be no cause of dyspleasur; whych they thinke to followe of necessytie, if the pleasure be vnhoneste. But yet to dyspyse the comlynes of bewtye, to waste the bodylye strengthe, to tourne nymblenes into sloughishnes, to consume and make feble the boddye wyth fastynge, to doo iniury to health, and to reiect the other pleasaunte motyons of nature (onles a man neglecte thies hys commodytyes, whyles he doth wyth a feruent zeale procure the wealth of others, or the commen proffytte, for the whyche pleasure forborne he is in hope of a greater pleasure at Goddes hand): els for a vayne shaddowe of vertue, for the wealthe and profette of no man, to punyshe hymselfe, or to the intente he maye be able courragiouslye to suffre aduersityes, whyche perchaunce shall neuer come to hym: thys to doo they thinke it a poynte of extreame madnes, and a token of a man cruelly minded towards hymselfe, and vnkynd towarde nature, as one so dysdaynynge to be in her daunger, that he renounceth and refuseth all her benefytes.

Thys is theire sentence and opinion of vertue and pleasure. And they beleue that by mans reason none can be fownde trewer then this, onles annye godlyer be inspyred into man from heauen. Wherin whether they belyue well or no, nother the tyme dothe suffer us to discusse, nother it ys nowe necessarye. For we haue taken vpon vs to shewe and declare theyr lores and ordenaunces, and not to defende them.

But thys thynge I beleue verely: howe soeuer thies decrees be, that their is in no place of the wordle nother a more excellent people, nother a more flouryshynges commen wealthe. They be lyghte and quycke of boddy, full of actiuity and nymblenes, and of more strengthe then a man wold iudge them by theyre stature, whyche for all that ys not to lowe. And though theyre soyle be not verye frutefull, nor theyre ayer verye holsome, yet agaynste the ayer they soo defende them wyth temperate dyete, and soo order and husbande theyr grounde wyth dylygente trauayle, that in no contreye ys greater increase, and plentye of corne and cattell, nor mens bodies of longer liffe, and subiect or apte to fewer deseases. There, therfore, a man maye see well and diligentlye exploited and furnished, not onlye those thinges whiche husbandmen doo commonly in 5 other countreys; as by craft and cunning to remedy the barrennes of the grounde; but also a hole wood by the handes of the people plucked vp by the rotes in one place and sett agayne in an other place. Wherin was hadde regard and consideration not of plentye but 10 of commodious carriage; that wood and tymber might be nigher to the sea, or the riuers, or the cities. For it is lesse laboure and busines to carrye grayne farre by lande then wood. The people be gentle, merye, quycke, and fyne wytte, delytynge in quyetnes, and, when nede requyret, able to abyde and suffre muchey bodelye laboure. Elles they be not greatelye desyerous and fonde of yt; but in the exercyse and studdye of the mynde they be neuer werye.

When they had harde me speake of the Greke lytter-20 [ar]ature or learnynge (for in Latyne theyre was nothynge that I thoughte they wolde greatelye allowe, besydes hystoryens and Poetes), they made wonderfull earneste and importunate sute vnto me, that I wolde teache and instructe them in that tonge and learynge. I beganne therefore to reade vnto them; at the fyrste, truelye, more bycause I wolde not seme to refuse the laboure, then that I hoped that they wolde annye thynge proffyte therin. But when I had gone forwarde a lytle, and perceaued incontynente by theyr dylygence 30 that my labour should not be bestowed in vayne; for they beganne so easelye to fassyon theyre letters, so plainly to pronounce the woordes, so quyckely to learne by harte, and so suerly to rehearse the same, that I marueled at it; sauynge that the most parte of them 35 were fyne and chosen wittes, and of rype age, pyked oute of the companye of the learned men, whyche not onlye of theyr owne free and voluntarye wyll, but also by the commaundemente of the cowncell, vndertooke to learne thys langage. Therfore in lesse then iii. yeres space their was nothing in the Greke tonge that they lackede. They were able to reade good authors wythout anny staye, if the booke were not false.

Thys kynde of learnynge, as I suppose, they toke so muche the souner, bycause it is sumwhat allyaunte to them. For I thynke that thys nation tooke their beginninge of the Grekes, bycause their speche, which in all other poyntes is not muche vnlyke the persian tonge, kepeth dyuers signes and tookens of the greke langage in the names of their cityes and of their magystrates.
They haue of me (for, when I was determyned to entre into my .iii. voyage, I caste into the shippe in the steade of marchandyse a pretye fardell of bookes, bycause I intended to come agayne rather neuer than shortlye) the mooste parte of Platoes woorkes; more of Aristotles; also Theophrastus of Plantes, but in diuers places (which I am sorye for) vnperfecte. For whyles wee were saylynge, a mormosett chaunced vpon the booke, as yt was neglygentlye layde by; whyche, wantonlye playinge therewyth, plucked owte certeyne leaues, and toore them in pieces. Of them that haue wrytten the grammer, they haue onelye Lascaris. For Theodorus I caried not wyth me; nor neuer a dyctyonarye, but Hesichius and Dioscorides. They sett greate stoore by Plutarches bookes. And they be delyted wyth Lucianes merye conceytes and iestes. Of the Poettes they haue Aristophanes, Homer, Euripides, and Sophocles in Aldus small prynte. Of the Historyans they haue Thucidides, Herodotus, and Herodian. Also my companion, Tricius Apinatus, caried with him phisick bokes, certein smal woorkes of Hippocrates, and Galenes Microtechne; the whyche boke they haue in greate estymatyon. For thoughe there be almost no nation vnder heauen that hath lesse nede of Phisick then they, yet, this notwith-standyng, Phisicke is no where in greater honour; bycause they count the knowlegde of yt emonge the goodlieste, and mooste proffytable partes of Philosophie. For whyles they by the helpe of thyss Philosophie searche owte the secrete mysteryes of nature, they thynke that they not onlye receaue therby wonderfull greate pleasur, but also obteyn great thankes and fauour of the auctoure and maker therof. Whome they thynke, accordyng to the fassyon of other artyfycers, to haue sett furthe the maruelous and gorgious frame of the worlde for man to beholde; whome onelye he hathe made of wytte andcapacitye to consydre and understand the excellencye of so greate a woorke. And therefore, saye they, dothe he beare more good wyll and loue to the curyous and diligent beholder and vewere of his woorke, and maruelour at the same, then he doth to him, whycho lyke a very beaste wythowte wytte and reason, or as one wythowte sense or mouynge, hath no regarde to soo greate and soo wonderfull a spectacle.
OF UTOPIA

The wyttes therefore of the Vtopians, inurede and exercysed in learnynge, be maruelous quycke in the inuentyon of feates, helpynge annye thynge to the aduantage and wealthe of lyffe. Howebeyt, ii. feates theye maye thanke vs for; that is, the scyence of imprintyng, and the crafte of makynge paper: and yet not onelye vs but chyefelye and pryncypallye themselfes. For when wee sheweda to them Aldus hys prynte in bookes of paper, and told them of the stuffe wher of paper is made, and of the feat of grauynge letters, speakyenge sumwhat more then wee colde playnlye declare (for there was none of vs that knewe perfectlye other the one or the other), they furthwyth v30 verye wyttelye coniectured the thynge. And where as before they wrote onelye in skynnes, in barkes of tryes, and in rides, now they haue attempted to make paper and to imprint letters. And though at the fyrste yt proued not all of the beste, yet by often 35 assayinge the same they shortlye gott the feate of bothe; and haue so broughte the matter abowte, that yf they had copyes of Greeke authores, they coulde lacke no bookes. But nowe they haue no moore then I rehearsed before; sauynge that by pryntyng of bookes they haue multyplyed and increased the same into manye thowsande of copyes.

COLLINS II

Who soeuer cummeth thether to see the lande, beynge excellente in annye gyfte of wytte, or throughe mucho and longe iournyenge well experiensed and sene in the knowledge of manye countreys (for the whyche cause wee were verye welcome to them), hym they receyue and interteyne wonders gentyllye and louyng-lye; for they haue delyte to heare what ys done in euerye lande. Howebeyt, verye few marchaunte men come thythere. For what shoulde they brynge thither? onles yt were Iron, or els golde and syluer; whiche they hadde rathere carrye home agayne. Also suche thynges as arre to be caryed owte of their lande, they thynke yt more wysedome to carrye that geer furthe themselfes, then that othere shoulde come thether to fetche yt; to thentente they maye the better knowe the owte landes of euerye syde them, and kepe in vre the feat and knouledge of saylinge.
[Chapter VII]

Of Bondemen, sicke persons, wedlocke, and dytuers other matters.

They nether make bondemen of prysoners taken in battayll, oneles yt be in battayle that the fowghte themselfes, nor bondemens chyldren, nor, to be shorte, annye man whome they canne gette owte of an othere countreye, thoughghe he were theyre a bondeman; but other suche as amonge themselfes for heynous offences be punnyshed wyth bondage, or elles suche as in the Cytyes of other landes for greate trespasses be condempned to deathe. And of thys sorte of bondemen they haue mooste stoore. For manye of them they brynge home, sumtymes payinge very lytle for them; yea, mooste commonlye gettynge them for gramercye.

Thyes sortes of bondemen they kepe not onelye in contynuall woorke and laboure, but alsoo in bandes. But theyre owne men they handle hardeste, whome they judge more desperate, and to haue deseruede greater punnysshemente; bycause they, beynge so godlye broughte vp to vertue, in soo excellente a common wealthe, cowlde not for all that be refreyned from mysdoynge.

An other kynde of bondemen they haue, when a vyle drudge, beynge a poore laborer in an other cowntreye, dothe chewse of hys owne free wyll to be a bondeman amonge them. Thyes they handle and order honestelye, and entereteyne almooste as gentyllye, as theyre owne free cytyzeyns; sauynge that they put them to a lytle more laboure, as thereto accustomede. Yf annye suche be dysposed to departe thens (whyche seldome ys seene) they nether holde hym agaynste hys wyll, nother sende hym awaye wyth emptye handes.

The sycke (as I sayde) they see to wyth greate affectyon, and lette nothyng at all passe, concernynge other Physycke or good dyete, wherby they may be restored agayne to theyre healthe. Them that be sycke of incurable dyseases they conforte wyth syttyng by them, wyth talkynge wyth them, and, to be shorte, wyth all maner of helps that maye be. But yf the dysease be not onelye vncurable, but also full of continuous paine and anguish, then the priestes and the magistrates exhort the man, seynge he ys not able to doo anye dewtye of lyffe, and by ouerlyuing hys owne deathe is noysome and yrkesome to other, and grousous to hymself; that he wyll determyne with hymselfe no longer to cheryshe that pestilent and painefull dysease: and, seynge hys lyfe is to hym but a tourmente, that he wyll not bee vnwyllynge to dye, but rather take a good hope to hym, and other dyspatche hymselfe owte of that painfull lyffe, as owte of a pryson or a racke of tormente, or elles suffer hym selfe wyllynglye to be rydde owte of yt by other. And in so doynge they tell hym he shal doo wyselye, seynge by hys deathe he shall lyse no commodytye, but ende hys payne. And bycause in that acte he shall followe the counsell of the pryestes, that is to saye of the interpreters of goddes wyll and pleasure, they shewe hym that he shall do lyke a godly and a vertuouse man. They that be thus persuaded fyynyshe theyre lyues wyllynglye, othere wyth hunger, or elles dye in theyre sleape wythowte anye feelinge of deathe. But they cause none suche to dye agaynste hys wyll; nor they vse no lesse dilygence and attendaunce about hym; beleuyng thys to be an honorable deathe. Elles he that kylleth hym selfe before that the pryestes and the counsell haue allowed the cause of hys deathe, hym, as vnworthy both of the earth and of fyer, they cast vnburied into some stinkynge marrish.
The woman is not married before she be xviii. yeres old. The man is iiiii. yeres elder before he marry. If other the man or the woman be proued to haue bodely offended, before their marriage, with an other, he or she whether it be is sharply punyshed; and both the offenders be forbydden euer after in all their lyfe to marrye, oneles the faulte be forgeuen by the princes pardone. But bothe the good man and the good wyfe of the house where that offence was done, as beyng slacke and neglygent in lokyng to there chardge, be in daunger of great reproche and infamy. That offence is so sharplye punyshed, bicause they perceaue, that onles they be diligentlye kept from the lybertie of this vice, fewe wyll ioyne together in the loue of marriage; wherein all the lyfe must be led with one, and also all the griefes and displeasures that come therewith must paciently be taken and borne.

Furthermore, in cheusyng wyfes and husbandes they obserue earnestly and straytelye a custome whiche semed to vs very fonde and folysh. For a sad and an honest matrone sheweth the woman, be she maide or widdowe, naked to the wower. And lykewyse a sage and discrete man exhibyteth the wowere naked to the woman. At this custome we laughed and disallowed it as foolyshe. But they on the other part doo greatlye wonder at the follye of all other nations, whyche in byinge a colte, where as a lytle money is in hassarde, be so charye and circumspecte, that though he be almoaste all bare, yet they wyll not bye hym, oneles the saddel and all the harneys be taken of, leaste vnder those couerynges be hydde som galle or soore; and yet in chewsynge a wyfe, whyche shalbe other pleasure or dyspleasure to them all theire lyfe after, they be so recheles, that, all the resydewe of the wooman's bodye beinge couered wyth cloothes, they esteme here scaselye be one handebredeth (for they can se no more but her face); and so do ioyne her to them not without great ieoperdie of euell agreeing together, if any thynge in her body afterwarde do offende and myslyke them. For all men be not so wyse as to haue respecte to the vertuous condicions of the partie; and the endowmentes of the bodye cause the vertues of the mynde more to be estemed and regarded, yea, euen in the mariages of wyse men. Verely so fowle deformitie may be hydde vnder thoes coueringes, that it maye quite alienate and take awaye the mans mynde from his wyfe, when it shal not be lawfull for their bodies to be seperate agayne. If suche deformitie happen by any chaunce after the mariage is consumate and finyshed; well, there is no remedie but patience. Ev ery man must take his fortune, well a worthe. But it were well done that a lawe were made, whereby all suche deceytes myghte be eschewed and aduoyded before hand. And thys were they constreyned more earnestlye to looke vpon, because they onlye of the nations in that parte of the worlde bee contente euer eyman wyth one wyfe a piece; and matrymoney is there neuer broken, but by death; excepte adulterye breake the bonde, or els the intollerable waivard maners of eyther partie. For if either of them fynde themselfe for any suche cause greued; they maye by the licence of the counsell chaunge and take an other. But the other partie lyueth euer after in infamye and out of wedlocke. But for the husbande to put away his wyfe for no faulte, but for that some myshappe is fallen to her bodye, thys by no meanes they wyll suffre. For they iudge it a greate poynte of crueltie that any body in their moste nede of helpe and comforte, shoulde be cast of and forsaken; and that olde age, whych both bryngeth sycknes with it, and is a syckenes it selfe, should vnkynydlye and vnfaythfullye be delte withall. But nowe and then it chaunseth, where as the man and the woman cannot well agree betwene themselues, bothe of them fyndyng other with whome they hope to lyue more quyetlye and meryly, that they by the full consent of them both be diuorsed a sonder and newe married to other; but that not without the aucthoritie of the counsell; which agreeeth to no dyuorses, before they and their wyfes haue diligently tried and examyned the matter. Yea and then also they be loth to consent to it, bicause they knowe thys to be the 5 nexthe waye to broke loue betwene man and wyfe, to be in easye hope of a newe mariaage.

Breakers of wedlocke be punyshed with moste greuous bondage. And if both the offenders were maried, then the partyes whiche in that behalfe haue suffered wronge be diuorsed from the auoutrers if they wyll, and be maried together, or els to whom they luste. But if eyther of them both do styll contynewe in loue towarde so vnkynde a bedfellowe, the vse of wedlocke is not to them forbydden, if the partie be disposed to followe in toylinge and drudgerye the person, which for that offence is condempned to bondage. And very ofte it chaunceth that the repentaunce of the one, and the earnest diligence of the other, dothe so moue the prince with pytie and compassion, that he restoreth the bonde persone from seruitude to libertie and freedom again. But if the same partie be taken eftsones in that faulte, there is no other way but death.

To other trespaces there is no prescript punyshment appoynted by anye lawe. But accordinge to the heynousenes of the offence, or contrarye, so the punyshemente is moderated by the discretion of the counsell. The husbandes chastice their wyfes; and the parentes their chyldren; oneles they haue done anye so horryble an offence, that the open punyshe-ment thereof maketh muche for the aduauncemente of honeste maners. But moste commenlye the moste heynous faultes be punyshed with the incommoditie of bondage. For that they suppose to be to the offenders no lesse grieafe, and to the common wealth more profitable, then if they should hastely put them to death, and make them out of the waye. For there cummeth more profite of their labour, then of their deathe; and by their example they feare other the lenger from lyke offences. But if they, beinge thus used, doo rebell and kicke agayne, then forsothe they be slayne as desperate and wilde beasts, whom nother pryson nor chayne could restraine and kepe vnder. But they which take their bondage patiентlye be not left all hopeles. For after they haue bene broken and tamed with longe myseries, yf then they shewe suche repentance, whereby it maye be perceaued that they be soryer for theire offence then for theire punyshe-mente, sumtymes by the Prynces prerogatyue, and sumtymes by the voyce and consent of the people, theire bondage other is mitigated, or els cleane re-mytted and forgueuen. He that moueth to aduoutrye is in no lesse daunger and ieoperdie, then yf he hadde committed aduoutrye in dede. For in all offences they counte the intente and pretensed purpose as euell as the acte or dede it selfe. For they thynke that no lette owghte to excuse hym, that dyd hys beste too haue no lette.

They sette greate store by fooles. And as it is greate reproche to do to annye of them hurte or iniury, so they prohibite not to take pleasure of foolysshnes. For that, they thynke, doth muche good to the foolels. And if any man be so sadde and sterne, that he cannot laughe nother at their wordes nor at their dedes, none of them be commytted to his tuition; for feare lest he would not ordre them gentilly and fauorably enough, to whom they should brynge no delectation (for other goodnes in them is none); muche lesse any proffyt shoulde they yelde hym. To mocke a man for hys deformitie, or for that he lacketh anye parte or lymme of hys bodye, is counted greate dishonestie and reproche, not to hym that is mocked, but to hym that mocketh; which vnwyssely doth imbrayde any man of that as a vice, whiche was not in his powre to eschewe. Also as they counte and reken very lyttell wytte to be in hym that regardeth not naturall bewtie and comlines, so to helpe the same with payntinges is taken for a vayne and a wanton pryde, not without great infamy. For they knowe euen by verye experience, that no comelines of bewtie doth so hyghly commende and auauence the wyues in the conceyte of thore husbandes, as honest conditions and lowlines. For as loue is oftentimes wonne with bewtie, so it is not kept, preserued, and continued, but by vertue and obedience.

They do not only feare theire people from doing euell by punyshmentes, but also allure them to vertue with rewardes of honoure. Therfore they set vp in the market place the ymages of notable men, and of such as haue bene great and bounteful benefactors to the common wealth, for the perpetual memorie of their good actes; and also that the glory and renownme of the auncetors may sturre and prouoke theire posteritie to vertue. He that inordinatlie and ambitiously desireth promotions, is lefte all hopeles for euer atteynyng any promotion as longe as he liueth. They lyue together louingly. For no magistrate is other hawte or ferefull. Fathers they be called, and lyke fathers they vse themselves. The citezens (as it is their dewtie) do willingly exhibite vnto them dewe honoure, without any compulsion. Nor the prince hymselfe is not knownen from the other by his apparel, nor by a crown or diademe or cappe of maintenaunce, but by a littell sheffe of corne caried before hym. And so a taper of wax is borne befor the byshop, whereby onely he is knowne.

They haue but few lawes. For to people so instructe and institute very fewe do suffice. Yea this thynge they chieflye reprovoue amonge other nations, that innumerable bokes of lawes and expositions vpon the same be not sufficient. But they thinke it against al right and iustice, that men shuld be bound to thoes lawes, whiche other be in numbre mo then be able to be readde, or els blinder and darker, then that any man can well understande them. Furthermore they utterly exclude and bannyshe all proctours and ser-geauntes at the lawe, which craftely handell matters, and subetely dispute of the lawes. For they thinke it most mete, that euery man shuld pleade his owne 5 matter, and tell the same tale before the judge, that he would tel to his man of lawe. So shall there be lesse circumstaunce of wordes, and the trwth shal sone cum to light; whiles the judge with a discrete judgement doth waye the wordes of hym whom no lawier hath instruct with deceit; and whiles he helpeth and beareth out simple wittes agaynst the false and malicious circumuertions of craftie chyldren. This is harde to be obserued in other countreis, in so infinitie a numbre of blynd and intricate lawes. But in Vtopia euery man is a cunnyng lawier. For, as I sayde, they haue verye fewe lawes; and the playnner and grosser that anye interpretation is, that they allowe as most iuste. For all lawes (saye they) bee made and pub-lysshed onelye to thenthente, that by them euerye man 15 shoulde be put in remembraunce of hys dewtye. But the craftye and subtyll interpretation of them can put verye fewe in that remembraunce (for they be but fewe that do perceau them); where as the simple, the plaine, and grosse meaning of the lawes is open to euerye man. Els as touchynge the vulgare sorte of the people, whiche be bothe moste in numbre, and haue moste neade to knowe theirde dewties, were it not as good for them that no lawe were made at all, as, when it is made, to brynge so blynde an interpretacion vpon 25 it, that without greate witte and longe arguynge no man can discusse it? to the findinge out whereof nother the grosse iudgement of the people can attayne, nother the hole lyfe of them that be occupied in woorkynge for theirde lyuynges can suffyse therto.

Thies vertues of the Vtopians have caused their nreste neyghbours and borderers, whiche lyue fre and vnder no subiection (for the Vtopians longe agoo haue delyuered manye of them from tyrannye), to take magistrates of them, some for a yeare, and some for fyue yeares space. Whiche, when the tyme of their office is expired, they brynge home agayn with honour and prayse; and take newe ons agayne wyth them into their country. Thies nations haue vndowtedlye verye well and holsomlye prouyded for their common wealthes. For seynge that bothe the makyng and the marrynge of the weale publique doth depende and I change of the maners of the rulers and magistrates, what officers coulde they more wyselye haue chosen, then thoes whiche cannot be ledde from honesty by X brybes (for to them that shortlye after shall departe thens into theyre owne countreye money shoulde be vnprofytable); nor yet be moued other with fauour or malyce towardes annye man, as beynge straungers and vnaquainted with the people? The which twoo vices of affection and auryce where they take place in iudgementes, incontynente they breake iustice, the strongeste and suereste bonde of a common wealthe. Thies peoples, whiche fetche their officers and rulers from them, the Vtopians cal their fellowes; and other, to whome they haue bene beneficiall, they call their frendes.

As towchynge leages, which in other places betwene countrey and countrey be so ofte concluded, broken, and made agayne, they never make none with anye nacion. For to what purpose serue leagues? saye they; as though nature had not set sufficient loue betwene man and man. And who so regardeth not nature, thynke yowe that he wyll passe for wordes? They be brought into thys opinion chieflye because that in thoes parties of the worldle leages betwene princes be wont to be kept and observed very slenderly. For here in Europa, and especiallye in thies partes, where the faythe and religion of Christe reygneth, the majestie of leagues is euerye where estemed holly and inuiolable; partlye through the iustice and goodnes of princes, and partelye through the reuerence of great byshoppes. Whyche, lyke as they make no promysse themselfes, but they doo verye religiouslye perforune the same, so they exhorte all prynces in any wyse to abyde by theyre promisses; and them that refuse or denye se to do, by their pontifical powre and aucthorytie they compell therto. And surely they thynde well that it myght seme a verye reprochefull thynge, yf in the leagues of them, whyche by a peculiare name be called faythfull, faythe shoulde haue no place.

But in that newefonnde parte of the worlde, which is scaselye so farre from vs beyonde the lyne equinoctiall, as owre lyfe and manners be dissidente from theirs, no truste nor confydence is in leagues. But the mo and holyer cerymonyes the league is knytte vp with, the soner it is broken, by some cauillation founde in the woordes; whiche manye tymes of purpose be so craftelye put in and placed, that the bandes can neuer be so sure nor so stronge, but they wyll fynde some hole open to crepe owte at, and to breake bothe league and trewthe. The whiche crafty dealynge, yea, the whiche fraude and deceyle, yf they shoulde knowe it to bee practysed amonge pryuate men in theire bargaynes and contractes, they woulde incontinent crye owte at it with a sower countenaunce, as an offence most detestable, and worthie to be punnyshed with a shamefull death; yea, euene verye they that auaunce themselfes authours of like councel geuen to princes. Wherfore it maye well be thought other that all iustice is but a basse and a lowe vertue, and whiche auaeleth it self farre vnder the hyghe dignitie of kynges; or, at the least wyse, that there be two iustices; the one mete for the inferioure sorte of the people, goinge a fote and crepynge by lowe on the grounde, and bounde downe on euery side with many bandes, because it shall not run at rouers: the other a pryncely vertue, whiche lyke as it is of mucho hygher maiestie then the other poore iustice, so also it is of muche more lybertie, as to the whiche nothinge is vnlawful that it lusteth after.
OF UTOPIA

Thies maners of princes (as I sayde) whiche be there so euyll kepers of leagues cause the Vtopians, as I suppose, to make no leagues at all: whiche perchaunce 5 woulde chaunge theire mynde if they lyued here.
Howebeit they thynke that though he leagues be neuer so faythfully obserued and kept, yet the custome of makinge leagues was verye euel begonne. For this causeth men (as though nations which be separate a 10 sondre by the space of a lytle hyl or a ryuer, were coupled together by no societe or bonde of nature), to thynke them selfes borne aduersaryes and enemyes one to an other; and that it is lawfull for the one to seke the death and destruction of the other, if leagues 15 were not; yea, and that, after the leagues be accorded, fryndeshypp dothe not growe and encrease; but the lycence of robbynge and stealynge doth stylly remayne, as farfurthe as, for lacke of forsight and aduisement in writinge the woordes of the league, anyy sentence 20 or clause to the contrary is not therin suffycyentlye comprehended. But they be of a contrary opinion:
that is, that no man ought to be counted an enemy, whych hath done no iniury; and that the felowshyppe of nature is a stronge league; and that men 25 be better and more surely knitte togethers by loue and beneuolence, then by couenauntes of leagues; by hartie affection of minde, then by woordes.
[CHAPTER VIII]

Of warfare,

Warre or battel as a thinge very beastelye, and yet to no kynde of beastes in so muche vse as it is to man, they do detest and abhorre; and, contrarye to the custome almost of all other natyons, they cownte no thinge so much against glorie, as glory gotten in warre. And therefore, though they do daily practise and exercise themselfes in the discypline of warre, and that not only the men, but also the women, vpon certeyne appoynted dayes, leste they shoulde be to seke in the feat of armes yf nead should requyre; yet they neuer [to] goo to battayle, but other in the defence of their owne cowntreye, or to dryue owte of theyr frendes lande the enemyes that be comen in, or by their powre to deliuer from the yoke and bondage of tyrannye some people that be oppressed wyth tyranny. Whyche thynge they doo of meere pytye and compassion. Howebeit they sende healpe to theyre fryndes; not euer in theire defence, but sum-times also to requyte and reuenue injuries before to them done. But thys they do not, onles their counsell and aduise in the matter be asked, whyles yt ys yet newe and freshe. For yf they fynde the cause probable, and yf the contrarye parte wyll not restore agayne suche thynges as be of them iustelye de-maundred, then they be the chyeffe auctores and makers of the warre. Whyche they do not onlye as ofte as by inrodes and inuasions of soldiours prays and booties be dreuen away, but then also much more mortally, when their frindes marchauntes in any land, other vnder the pretence of vniust lawes, or els by the wresting and wronge vnderstanding of good lawes, do sustaine an vniust accusation vnder the colour of justice. Nother the battel which the vtopians fowghte for the Nephelogetes against the Alaopolitanes, a lytle before oure time, was made for annye other cause, but that the Nephelogete marchaunte men, as the vtopians thought, suffred wrong of the Alaopolitanes, vnder the pretence of righte. But whether it were righte or wrong, it was with so cruell and mortal warre reuenged, the countreis round about ioyning their healpe and powre to the puysaunce and malice of bothe parties, that most florishing and wealthie peoples beyng some of them shrewedely shaken, and some of them sharply beaten, the mischeues were not finished nor ended, untill the Alao-politanes at the last were yelded vp as bondmen into the iurisdiction of the Nephelogetes. For the vtopians fowghte not this warre for themselfes. And yet the Nephelogetes before the warre, when the Alapolitanes flourished in wealth, were nothyng to be compared with them.

So egerly the Vtopians prosequute the injuries done to ther fr bendes, yea, in money matters; and not their owne likewise. For if they by coueyne or gyle be wiped beside their gooddes, so that no violence be done to their bodies, they wreake their anger by absteining from occupieng with that nation, untill they haue made satisfaction. Not for bicause they set lesse stoo re by their owne cytyzeyns, then by their frindes; but that they take the losse of their fryndes money more heuely then the losse of theyr owne: bicause that their frindes marchaunte men, forasmuche as that they leise is their owne priuate gooddes, susteyne great damage by the losse; but their owne citizeyns leise nothing but of the commen gooddes, and of that which was at home plentifull and almost superfluous, elles hadde it not bene sent furth. Therfore no man feeleth the losse. And for this cause they thynke it to cruell an acte to reuenge that losse wyth the death of many; the incommoditie of the whiche losse no man feeleth nother in his liffe, nother in his liuinge. But if it chaunce that any of their men in any other countreye be maymed or kylled, whether it be done by a commen or a priuate councell; knowing and tryng out the treuth of the matter by their ambassadours, onles the offenders be rendered vnto them in recompence of the iniury, they will not be appeased; but incontinent they proclayme warre against them. The offenders yelded they punnishe other with death or with bondage.

They be not only sorye, but also ashamed to atchieue the victory with much bloodshed; cowntinge it greate follye to bye pretyous wares to dere. They reioyse and auauente themselfes, yf they vaynquyshe and oppresse their enemyes by crafte and deceyt. And for that act they make a generall tryumpe; and as yf the matter were manfullye handeled, they settv a pyller of stone in the place where they so vanyssed theyre enemyes, in token of the vyctory. For then they glorie, then they booste and cracke that they haue plaied the men in dede, when they haue so ouercommen, as no other lyuynge creature but onely man coulde; that ys to saye, by the myghte and pusyaunce of wytte. For wyth boddelye strengthe (saye they) beares, lyons, boores, wulffes, dogges, and other wylde beastes doo fyghte. And as the mooste parte of them doo passe vs in strengthe and fyerce courage, so in wytte and reason wee be muche stronger then they all.

Theyre chyefe and pryncypall purpose in warre ys to obteyne that thyng, whyche yf they had before obteyned, they wolde not haue moued battayle. But if that be not possible, they take so cruell vengeauce of them whych be in the fault, that euer after they be aferde to doo the lyke. Thys ys theyre cheyffe and pryncypall intente, whyche they immedyatelye and fyrste of all prosequete and sette forewarde; but yet so, that they be more cyrcumspecte in auoydyngge and eschewyngge ieopardyes, then they be desyerous of prayse and renowne. Therfore immediatly after that warre is ones solemply denounced, they procure manye proclamations, signed with their owne commen seale, to be sett up preuilie at one time in their ennemyes lande, in places mooste frequented. In thyes proclamations they promysse greate rewardes to hym that will kyll their enemies prince; and sumwhat lesse gyftes, but them verye greate also, for euerye heade of them, whose names be in the sayde proclamacions conteined. They be those whome they count their chieffe aduersaries, next vnto the prince. What soeuer is prescribed vnto him that killeth any of the proclaimed persons, that is dobled to him that bringeth any of the same to them aliue: yea, and to the proclaimed persones them selfes, if they wil chaunge their mindes and come into them, takinge their partes, they profer the same greate rewardes with pardon, and euerty of their liues.

Therfore it quickly cummeth to passe that they haue al other men in suspicicion, and be vnfaithfull and mistrusting emong themselfes one to another; liuing in great feare and in no lese ieopardye. For it is well known that dyuers times the most part of them, and specially the prince him selfe, hath bene betraied of them in whome they put their most hoope and trust. So that there is no maner of acte nor dede, that giftes and rewardes do not enforce men vnto. And in rewardes they kepe no measure; but, remembbring and considering into howe great hasard and ieopardie they call them, endeououre themselfes to recompence the greatenes of the daunger with lyke great benefites. And therfore they promisse not only wonderfull greate abundaunce of golde, but also landes of greate reuuenues, lyenge in moost saufe places emonge their fryndes. And theyre promysses they performe faithfully, without any fraud or cunning.

This custom of dying and selling adversaries among other people is disallowed, as a cruel act of a base and cowardly mind. But they in this behalf think themselves much prayse worthy, as who like wise men by this means dispatch great wars with out any battle or skirmish. Yea, they count it also a deed of pity and mercy, because that by the death of a few offenders the lives of a great number of innocents, as well of their own men as also of their enemies, be rescued and saved, which in fighting should have been slain. For they do no less pity the base and common sort of their enemies people, then they do their own; knowing that they are driven to war against their wills by the furious madness of their princes and heads.

If by none of these means the matter go forward as they would have it, then they procure occasions of debate and dissension to be spread among their enemies; as by bringing the princes' brother, or some of the noble men, in hope to obtain the kynedome. If this way prevail not, then they rise up, the people that be nexte neighbours and borderers to their enemies, and them they sette in their neckes vnder the colour of some olde tylle of ryght, suche as kynges doe never lacke. To them they promise their helpe and ayde in their warre. And as for moneye they gyue them abundance; but of their owne cytyzeyns they sende to them fewe or none. Whome they make so much of, and love so intyeryle, that they wolde not be willing to change any of them for their adversaries prince. But their gold and siluer, because they kepe yt all for this only purpose, they laye it owte frankly and freely; as who should have euon as wealthe, if they hadde bestowed it euerye penny. Yea, and besydes theyre ryches, whyche they kepe at home, they haue also an inffynyte treasure abrode, by reason that (as I sayde before), manye natyons be in their debte. Therefore they hyere soldyours oute of all countrieys, and sende them to battayle; but cheifiye of the Zapoletes. Thys 5 people is .500. myles from Vtopia eastewarde. They be hydeous, saugse, and fyerce, dwellynge in wild woodes and high mountaines, where they were bredde and brought vp. They be of an harde nature, able to abide and susteine heate, cold, and labour; ab-10 horrynge from all delycate deyntyes, occupyenge no husbandrye nor tylllage of the ground, homelye and rude both in the buildinge of their houses and in their apparrell; geuen vnto no goodnes, but onelye to the breede and bringynge vp of cattell. The mooste parte 15 of theire lyuynges is by huntyngne and stealynge. They be borne onelye to warre, whyche they dylygentlye and earnestlye seke for. And when they haue gotten yt, they be wonders gladde therof. They goo furthe of theire countreye in greate companyes together, and who soeuer lacketh souldyours, there they proffer theire seruyce for small wages. Thys ys onely the crafte that they haue to gette theire lyuynges by. They maynteyne theyr lyfe by sekyng theyre deathe. For them, whomewyth they be in wayges, they fyghte 25 hardelye, fyerslye, and daythefullye. But they bynde themselfes for no certeyne tyme. But vpon thys condytion they entre into bondes, that the nexte daye they wyll take parte wyth the other syde for greater wayges; and the nexte daye after that they wyll be 30 readye to come backe agayne for a lytle more moneye. There be fewe warres there awaye, wherin is not a greate numbre of them in bothe partyes. Therefore yt daylye chauncethe that nye kynsefolke, whyche were hiered together on one parte, and there verye fryndelye 35 and famlyerly vsed themselfes one wyth an other, shortlye after, beynge separate into contrarye partes, runne one agaynste an other enuyouslye and fyercelye; and forgetynge bothe kyndred and frendeshyp, thruste theyre swordes one in another: and that for none other cause, but that they be hyered of contrarye prynces for a lytle moneye. Whyche they doo so hyghelye regarde and estame, that they will easelye be prouoked to chaunge partes for a halfpenye more wayges by the daye. So quyckelye they haue taken a smacke in couetesenes; whyche for all that ys to them no proffyte. For, that they gette by fyghtynge, ymmedyatelye they spende vnthryftelye and wretched-lye in ryott.

Thys people fyghte for the Vtopians agaynste all natyons, bycause they giue them greater wayges, then annye other natyon wyll. For the Vtopians, lyke as they seke good men to vse wel, so they seke thyes euell and vycyous men to abuse. Whome, when neade requyreth, wyth premisses of greate rewardes they putt furthe into greate ieopardyes; from whens the mooste part of them neuer cummeth againe to aske their rewardes. But to them that remain on line they paye that which they promissed faithfully, that they may be the more willinge to put themselues in like daungers another time. Nor the Vtopians passe not how many of them they bring to distruction. For they beleue that they should doo a very good deade for all mankind, if they could ridde out of the wordle all that fowle, stinkinge denne of that most wicked and cursed people.

Next vnto thies they vse the soldiours of them whom they fight for. And then the help of their other frindes. And last of al they ioyne to their owne citizeins. Emong whome they gyue to one of tried vertue and proves the rewle, gouernaunce, and conductyon of the hole armye. Vnder hym they appoynte ii. other, whyche whyles he ys sauffe be bothe pryuate and owte of offyce; but yf he be taken or slayne, the one of the other .ii. succedeth hym, as yt were by inherytaunce. And if the second miscarry, then the third taketh hys rowme; leaste that (as the chaunce of battell ys vncerteyne and dowtful), the yeopardye or deathe of the capytayne shoulde brynge the hole armye in hasarde. They chuse soldyers owte of euerye cytye those whyche putt furthe themselves wylynglye. For they thruste no man furthe into warre agaynste hys wyll; bycause they beleue, yf annye man be fearfull and faynte harted of nature, he wyll not onelye doo no manfull and hardye act hym selfe, but also be occasyon of cowardenes to hys fellowes. But yf annye battell be made agaynste theyre owne countruye, then they putt thyes cowardes, so that they be stronge bodyed, in shyppes emonge other bolde harted men. Or elles they dyspose them vpon the walles, from whens they maye not flye. Thus, what for shame that theyre ennemyes be at hande, and what for bycause they be withowt hope of runnynge awaye, they forgette all feere. And manye tymes extreame necessytye turneth cowardnes into prowes and manlynes.

But as none of them ys thrust forthe of his countruy into warre agaynste hys wyll, so women that be wylyngye to accompanye their husbandes in times of warre be not prohybyted or stopped. Yea, they prouoke and exhorte them to yt wyth prayses. And in sett fylde the wyues doo stande euerye one by here owne husbandes syde. Also euery man is compassed nexte abowte wyth hys owne chyldren, kins folkes, and alliaunce; that they, whom nature chieffelye moueth to mutuall succoure, thus stondynge together, maye helpe one an other. It is a great reproche and dishonestie for the husbande to come home wythowte hys wiffe, or the wiffe withoute her husband, or the sonne without his father. And therfore, if the other part sticke so harde by it, that the battell come to their handes, it is fought with great slaughter and bloodshed, euens to the ytter destruction of both partes. For as they make all the meanes and shyftes that maye be, to kepe themselves from the necessitye of fyghtynge, so that they may dispatche the battell by their hiered soldyours, so, when there is no remedy but that they muste neades fyghte themselfes, then they do as corragiouslye fall to it, as before, whyles 5 they myght, they dyd wyselye auoyde it. Nor they be not moste fierce at the fyrst bronte. But in continuance by litle and lytle theirie fierce corrage encreaseth, with so stubborne and obstynate myndes, that they wyll rather die then gyue backe an ynche. For that suertye of lyuynge, whiche euery man hath at home, beynge ioyned with noo carefull anxietye or remembraunce how theire posteritie shall lyue after them (for this pensifenes oftentymes breaketh and abateth couragious stomakes) maketh them stowte and hardy, and dysdaynful to be conquered. Moreover, theire knowledge in cheualrye and feates of armes putteth them in a good hope. Finally, the holsome and vertuous opinions, wherein they were brought vp even from theire childhode, partely through learnyng, and partelye through the good ordenaunces and lawses of theire weale publique, augmente and encresse theire manfull currage. By reason whereof they nother set so litle store by theire liues, that they will rasshely and vnaduisedlye cast them away; nor they be not so farre in lewde and fond loue therewith, that they will shamefully couete to kepe them, when honestie biddeth leaue them.

When the battel is hottest and in al places most 30 fierce and feruent, a bende of chosen and picked yong men, whiche be sworne to liue and dye togethers, take vpon them to destroye theire aduersaries capitaine. Hym they inuade, now with preuy wyeles, now by open strength. At hym they strike both nere and 35 farre of. He is assayled with a long and a continewal assault; freshe men styll commyng in the weried mens places. And seldome it chaunceth (onles he saue hymselfe by flying) that he is not other slayne, or els taken prysoner, and yelded to his enemies alyue. If they wynne the fyelde, they persecute not theire enemies with the violent rage of slaughter. For they had rather take them alieue then kyll them. Neither they do so followe the chase and pursute of their enemies, but they leaue behynde them one parte of their hoste in battayl arraye vnnder theirie standardys. In so muche that, if all theirie hole armie be discumfetyd and ouercum, sauing the rerewarde, and that they therewith achieue the victory, then they had rather lette all theirie enemies scape, then to followe them owt of array. For they remembre it hath chaunced vnto themselves more then ones: the hole powre and strength of theyre hoste being vanquished and put to flight, whiles theirie enemies, reioysing in the victory, haue persecuted them flying, some one way and some an other; fewe of theirie men lying in an ambusshe, there reddy at all occasions, haue sodaynly rysen vpon them thus dispersed and scattered owt of array, and through presumption of safetye vnaduisedly pursuynge the chase, and haue incontinent changed the fortune of the hole battayll; and spyte of there tethes wrestynge owt of theirie handes the sure and vndowted victory, being a little before conquered, haue for theirie parte conquired the conquerers.

It is hard to say whether they be craftier in laynge an ambusshe, or wittier in auoydynge the same. Yowe woulde thynke they intende to flye, when they meane nothing lesse. And contrary wise, when they go about that purpose, yow wold beleue it were the least part of their thoughte. For if they perceauae themselfes other ouermatched in nymbre, or closed in to narrowe a place, then they remoue their campe other in the nyght season with silence, or by some pollicie they deceae theirie enemies; or in the daye time they retiere backe so softely, that it is no lesse ieoperdie to medle with them when they gyue backe then when they preese on. They fence and fortifie theire campe sewerlye with a deape and a brode trenche. The earth therof is cast inward. Nor they do not set drudgis and slaues a worke about it. It is doone by the handes of the souldiours them selfes. All the hole armye worketh vpon it, except them that watche in harneis before the trenche for sodeyne auentures. Therefore, by the labour of so manye, a large trenche closinge in a great compasse of grounde is made in lesse tyme then any man wold beleue.

Theire armoure or harneis whiche they weare is sure and stronge to receaue strokes, and handsome for all mouinges and gestures of the bodye; in so muche that it is not unweldy to swymme in. For in the discipline of theire warefare, amonge other feates thei lerne to swimme in harneis. Their weapons be arrowes afarre of, which they shote both strongly and suerly; not onelye fotemen but also horsemen. At hande strokes they vse not swordes but pollaxes, whiche be mortall, aswel in sharpenes as in weyghte, bothe for foynes and downe strokes. Engines for warre they deuyse and inuente wonders wittely. Whiche, when they be made, they kepe very secret; leaste if they should be knowne before neade requyre, they should be but laughed at, and serue to no purpose. But in makynge them, hereunto they haue chiefe respecte; that they be both easy to be caried, and handsome to be moued and turned about.

Truce taken with theire enemies for a shorte time they do so fermelye and faythfully keape, that they wyll not breake it; no not though they be theire vnto prouoked. They do not waste nor destroy there enemies lande with forraginges, nor they burne not vp theire corne. Yea, they saue it as muche as maye be from beinge ouerrune and troden downe, other with men or horses; thynkynge that it groweth for their owne use and profytyt. They hurt no man that is vnarmed, onles he be an espiall. All cities that be yelded vn to them, they defende. And suche as they wynne by force of assaute they nother dispoyle nor sacke; but them that withstode and dyswaded the yeldynge vp of the same they put to death; the other soul diours they punnyshe with bondage. All the weake multitude they leave vntouched. If they knowe that anye cytezeins counselled to yelde and rendre vp the citie, to them they gyue parte of the condemned mens goodes. The resydewe they distribute and gyue frely amonc them, whose helpe they had in the same warre. For none of them selfes taketh anye portion of the praye.

But when the battayll is fynyshed and ended, they put theire frendes to neuer a penny coste of al the chardges that they were at, but laye it vpon theire neckes that be conquered. Them they burdeyne with the hole chardge of theire expenceis; which they demaunde of them partelye in money, to be kept for lyke vse of battayll, and partelye in landes of greate reuenues, to be payde vnto them yearlye for euer. Suche reuenues they haue nowe in manye countreis; whiche by litle and lytle rysyng, of dyuers and sondry caus, be encreased aboue vii. hundreth thousand ducates by the yere. Thither they sende furth some of their ciztezins as Lieuetenauntes, to lyue theire sump-tuously lyke men of honoure and renowne. And yet, this notwithstanding, muche money is saued, which commeth to the commen treasury; onles it so chaunce, that thei had rather truste the countrey with the money. Which many times thei do so long vntil they haue neade to occupie it. And it seldome happeneth, that thei demaund al. Of thies landes thei assigne part vnto them, which at their request and exhortacion put themselves in such ieoperdies as I spake of before. If anye prynce stirre vp warre agaynst them, intendying to invade their land, they mete hym incontinent out of their own borders with great powre and strengthe. For they neuer lyghtly make warre in their owne countreis. Nor they be neuer brought into so extreme necessitie, as to take helpe out of forreyne landes into thire

owne Ilande.
Chapter IX

Of the religions in Utopia.

There be divers kinds of religion, not only in sundry parts of the Ilande, but also in divers places of everye citie. Some worship for God the sunne; some the mone; some some other of the planetes. There be that gyue worship to a man that was ones of excellente vertue or of famous glory, not only as God, but also as the chiefest and hyghest God. But the moste and the wysest parte (reiectynge all thies) beleue that there is a certayne Godlie powre un-knownen, euerlastyng, incomprehensible, inexplicable, farre abowe the capacitie and retche of mans witte, dispersed through out all the worlde, not in bygnes, but in vertue and powre. Hym they call the father of all. To hym allone they attribute the begynnynges, the encreasynges, the procedynges, the chaunges, and the endes of all thynges. Nother they gyue deuine honours to any other then to him.

Yea, all the other also, though they be in divers opinions, yet in this pointe they agree all together with the wisest sort, in beleuynge that there is one chiefe and principall God, the maker and ruler of the hole worlde; whome they all commonly in theire countrey language call Mythra. But in this they disagree, that amonge some he is counted one, and amonge some an other. For euery one of them, whatsoeuer that is whiche he taketh for the chiefe God, thynketh it to be the very same nature, to whose onyly deuyne myght and maiestie the som and soue-raintie of al thinges, by the consent of all people.
attributed and geuen. Howe be it, they al begynne by litle and litle to forsake and fall from thys varietie of superstitions, and to agree togethers in that religion whiche semethe by reason to passe and excell the resydevew. And it is not to be dowted but all the other would longe agoo haue bene abolyshed; but that, whatsoeuer vnprosperous thynge happened to any of them as he was mynded to chaunge his religion, the fearefulnes of people dyd take it not as a thynge cummynge by chaunce, but as sente frome God owt of heauen; as thoughe the God, whose honour he was forsakynge, woulde reuenge that wicked purpose against him.

But after they harde vs speake of the name of Christe, of his doctryne, lawes, myracles, and of the no lesse wonderful constancie of so manye martyrs, whose bloude wylogylye shedde brought a great numbere of nations throughge out all partes of the worlde into theire secte; yowe wyll not beleue with howe gladde myndes they agreed vnto the same; whether it were by the secrete inspiration of God, or els for that they thought it next vnto that opinion which amonge them is counted the chiefest. Howe be it, I thynke this was no smal healpe and further-aunce in the matter, that they harde vs saye that Christ instytuted amonge hys all thynges commen; and that the same communitie dothe yet remayne amongst the rightest Christian companies. Verely, howe soeuer it came to passe, manye of them consented togethers in oure religion, and were wasshed in the hollye water of baptisme.

But because amonge vs foure (for no moo of vs was left alyue; two of oure companye beyng deade) there was no prieste, whiche I am ryghte sorye for, they, beinge entered and instructed in all other poyntes of oure relygion, lacke onelye those Sacramentes, whyche here none but priestes do minister. Howe be it, they vnderstande and perceyue them, and be verye desierous of the same. Yea, they reason and dispute the matter earnestly amonge themselfes, whether, without the sendyng of a christian bysshoppe, one chosen out of their owne people may receaue the ordre of priest-hode. And truly they were mynded to chuse one: but at my departure from them they hadde chosen none. They also, whiche do not agree to Christes religion, feare no man frome it, nor speake agaynste anye man that hath receyued it. Sauing that one ofoure companye in my presence was sharplye punyshed.

He, as sone as he was baptised, began against our willes, with more earnest affection then wisdome, to reason of Christes religion; and began to waxe so hotte in his matter, that he dyd not only preferre oure relygion before all other, but also dyd utterlye despise an condempne al other, callynge them prophane, and the followers of them wicked and deuelishe, and the chyldren of euerlasting damnation. When he had thus longe reasoned the matter, they layde holde on hym, accused hym, and condempned hym into exyle; not as a despyser of religion, but as a sedicious persone, and a rayser vp of dissention amonge the people. For this is one of the auncientest lawes amonge them: that no man shalbe blamed for reasonynge in the mayntenaunce of his owne religion.

For kyng Vtopus, euen at the first begynning, hearing that the inhabitauntes of the lande were before his commyng thether at contynuall dissention and stryfe among themselfes for their religions; per-ceyuing also that this common dissention, whyles euerye seuerall secte tooke seuerall partes in fyghting for their countrye, was the only occasion of hys conquest ouer them all; assone as he had gotten the victory, first of all he made a decreie, that it shoulde be lawfull for every man to fauoure and followe what religion he would, and that he myght do the beste he cold to bryng other to his opinion; so that he dyd it peaceably, gentelye, quyetly, and soberlye, without hastye and contentious rebuking and inuethyng against other. If he coulde not by fayre and gentle speche induce them vnto his opinion, yet he should vse no kinde of violence, and refrayne from displeasaunt and seditious worordes. To him that would vehemently and ferentlye in this cause striue and contend, was decreid bannishment or bondage.

This lawe did kynge Vtopus make, not only for the maintenaunce of peace, which he sawe through continuall contention and mortal hatred ytterly ex- tinguished, but also because he thought this decrye shuld make for the furtheraunce of religion. Wherof he durst define and determine nothing vnaduisedly; as dowting whether god, desieryng manifolde and diuers sortes of honoure, would inspire sondrie men with sondrie kyndes of religion. And this suerly he thought a very vnmete and folishe thing, and a pointe of arrogant presumption, to compell all other by violence and threatenynges to agre to the same that thou beleuest to bee trewe. Furthermore though there be one religion whiche alone is trewe, and all other vayne and superstitious, yet did he well forsee (so that the matter were handeled with reason and sober modestie), that the trewthe of the owne powre woulde at the laste issue owte and come to lyght. But if contention and debate in that behalfe shoulde continuallye be vsed, as the woorste men be moste obstynate and stubburne, and in theire euell opynion moste constante; he perceaued that then the beste and holyest religion woulde be troden vnder foote and destroyed by moste vayne superstitions; een as good corne is by thornes and weydes ouergrowen and choked. Therfore al this matter he lefte vndiscussed, and gaue to euerie man free libertie and choyse to beleue what he woulde; sauinge that he earnestly and straytelye chardged them, that no man shoulde conceaue so vile and base an opinion of the dignitie of mans nature, as to thinke that the sowles do dye and perishe with the bodye; or that the worlde runneth at al auentures, gouerned by no diuine prouidence. And therfore thei beleue that after this lyfe vices be extremely punyshed, and vertues bountyfully rewarded. Hym that is of a contrary opinion they counte not in the nubmbe of men, as one that hath aualed the hyghe nature of his sowle to the vielnes of brute beastes bodies; muche lesse in the nubmbe of their citiziens, whoes lawes and ordenaunces, if it were not for feare, he wold nothing at al esteme. For yow may be suer that he wil study other with crafte preuely to mock, or els violently to breake, the commen lawes of his countrey, in whom remayneth no further feare then of the lawes, nor no further hope then of the bodye. Wherefore he that is thus mynded is depryued of all honours, excluded from all offices, and reiecte from all common adminis-trations in the weale publyque. And thus he is of all sorte despysed as of an vnprofitable and of a base and vile nature. Howe be it they put hym to no punyshemente, because they be perswaded that it is in no mans powre to beleue what he lyst. No, nor they constrayne hym not with threatninges to dissemble his minde, and shewe countenaunce contrary to his thoughte. For deceite, and falsched, and all maner of lyes, as next vnto fraude, they do meruelously deteste and abhorre. But they suffre him not to dispute in his opinion, and that onlye emong the commen people. For elles a parte, emong the pryestes and men of grauity, they doo not only suffre but also exhorte him to dispute and argue; hoopinge that at the laste that madnes will giue place to reason.

There be also other, and of them no small nubmre, whych be not forbidden to speake their mindes, as grounding their opinion vpon some reason; being in their liuinge nother euell nor vitious. Their heresy is much contrary to the other. For they beleue that the soules of brute beastes be immortall and euerverlast-\ing; but nothinge to be compared with owers in dignitie, nether ordyned and predestinate to like felicite. For all they beleue certeinly and sewerly, that mans blesse shall be so greate, that they doo 5 morne and lamente euerye mans sicknes, but no mans death; oneles it be one whom they see depart from his liffe carfully, and agaynst his will. For this they take for a very euell token, as though the sowle, beinge in dyspayre and vexed in conscience, through some preuy and secret forefeilyng of the punnishment now at hande, were aferde to depart. And they thinke he shall not be welcome to God, whyche, when he ys called, runneth not to hym gladly, but ys drawn by force and sore agaynste hys wyll. They therfore that see thys kynde of deathe doo abhorre it, and them that so die they burye wyth sorrow and silence. And when they haue prayed God to be mercifull to the sowle, and mercifully to pardon the infirmitie of the thereof, they couer the dead coarse with 24 earthe.

Contrarye wise, all that depart merely and ful of good hoope, for them no man mournethe, but followethe the heerse with ioyfull synging, commending the soules to god with great affection. And at the last 2 not with mourning sorrow, but with a great reuerence, they bourne the bodies; and in the same place they set vp a piller of stone, with the deade mans titles therin graued. When they be comme home they reherse his vertuouse maners and his good dedes. 3 But no parte of his liffe is soo oft or gladly talked of as his mery deathe. They thinke that this remem-\braunce of their vertue and goodnes doth vehementely prouoke and enforce the quicke to vertue; and that nothing can be more pleaunt and acceptable to the dead; whom they suppose to be present emong them when they talke of them, though to the dull and feoble eye sight of mortall men they be inuisible.
For it were an vnconuenient thinge, that the blessed shoulde not be at libertye to goo whether they wold. And it were a poynte of greate vnkyndnes in them, to haue vtterly caste awaye the desyer of vysytynge and seynge their frinedes, to whome they were in theyr lyfe tyme ioyned by mutuall loue and charytye; whych in good men after theyre deathe they cownte to be rather encreasede then dymynyshed. They beleue therefore that the deade be presentlye conuersaunte emong the quicke, as beholders and witnesses of all their woordes and deeds. Therefore they go more corragiously to their busines, as hauing a trust and affiaunce in such ouerseers. And this same belefe of the present conuersacion of their forefathers and aunctours emonge them feareth the them from all secrete dishonesty.

They vtterly despise and mocke sothe sayinges and diuinacions of thinges to come by the flighte or voyces of birdes, and all other diuinations of vayne superstition, which in other countreys be in great observation. But they highly esteame and worshippe miracles, that come by no helpe of nature, as workes and witnesses of the presente powre of God. And such they saye doo chaunce there very often. And sumtimes in great and dowtefull matters, by commen intercession and prayers, they procure and obtayne them with a suer hoope and confidence and a stedfast beleffe.

They thinke that the contemplacion of nature, and the prayse thereof cumminge, is to God a very accept- able honour. Yet there be many so earnestly bent and affectioned to religion, that they passe no thinge for learning, nor giue their mindes to no knowledge of thinges. But ydelnnes they vtterly forsake and eschue, thinkinge felicitie after this liffe to be gotten and obteined by busy labors and good exercises. Some therfore of them attende vpon the sicke, some amend highe waies, clense ditches, repaire bridges, digge turfes, grauell, and stones, fell and cleaue woode, bring wood, corre, and other thinges into the cities in cartes, and serue not onlye in commen woorkes, but also in pryuate laboures, as seruauntes, yea, more then bondmen. For what so euer vnpleasaunte, harde, and vile worke is any where, from the which labour, lothsumnes, and desperation doth fraye other, all that they take vpon them willingly and gladly; procuring quyete and rest to other; remayning in continuall woorke and labour themselfes; not em-brayding others there wyth. They nother reproue other mens liues, nor glorye in theire owne. Thies men, the more seruiseable they behaue them selfes, the moore they be honoured of all men.

Yet they be diuided into ii. sectes. The one is of them that liue single and chast, absteining not only from the company of women, but al so from the eating of flesh, and some of them from al maner of beastes. Which, ytterly reiectynge the pleasures of this present lyffe as hurtefull, be all hollye set vpon the dessire of the lyffe to come; by watchynge and sweatynge hoping shortly to obtaine it, beyng in the meane season meerye and lustye. The other sect is no lesse desyerous of labour, but they embrace matrimony; not despising the solace therof; thinking that they can not be discharged of their bounden duetyes towards nature withoute labour and toyle nor towards their natuie countreye, wythowte procreacion of chyldren. They abstayne from no pleasure that dothe nothynge hynder them from laboure. They louve the fleshe of fourcfoted beastes, bycause they beleue that by that meate they be made hardier and stronger to woorke. The Vtopians count this secte the wiser, but the other the hollier. Which, in that they preferre single liffe before matrimony, and that sharpe liffe before an easier liffe, if herin they grounded vpon reason, they wold mock them; but now, forasmuch as they say they be ledde to it by religion, they honour and worship them. And thies be they whome in their language by a peculyare name they call Buthrescas, the whyche woorde by interpretation signifieth to vs men of religion, or religious men.

They haue pryestes of exceeding hollines, and therefore very few. For there be but xiii. in every city, according to the number of theire churches, sauynge when they go furth to battell. For than vii. of them goo furthe wyth the armye: in whose steades so manye newe be made at home. But the other, at 10 theyre retourne home, agayn reentre every one into his own place. They that be aboue the number, vntyll suche tyme as they succede into the places of the other at theyre dyinge, be in the meane season continuallye in company wyth the bishoppe. For he ys the chyeffe heade of them all. They be chosen of the people as the other magistrates be, by secrete voices for the auoyding of strife. After their election they be consecrate of their owne company. They be overseers of all deuyne matters, orderers of religions, and as it were jugers and maisters of maners. And it is a great dishonestye and shame to be rebuked or spoken to by any of them for dissolute and incont-inent liuine.

But as it is their ofyce to gyue good exhortations and counsell, so it is the deuty of the prince and the other magistrates to correct and punnyshe offenders; sauynge that the priestes, whome they find exceeding vicious liuers, them they excommunicate from hauing any interest in diuine matters. And there is almost no punnishment emonge them more feared. For they runne in verye great infamy, and be inwardly tormented with a secrete feare of religion, and shall not long scape free with their bodies. For onles they, by quycke repentance, approwe the amendement of their lyffes to the priestes, they be taken and punnished of the counsell as wycked and irreligious.

Both childhode and youth is instructed, and tought of them. Now they be not men so base and base, as to make them in learning then in vertue, which is the true For they see with very great and tender and plain, good opinion, the place for the conservation of their wealth, when they be once rooted in children, with them all their life after, and be wise. In the defence and maintenance of these men wealth, which never dealeth but according to the rising of one employer.
The priests also, they be with such not excluded the prophets, nor any and none but widows and old men, priests, I say, take to their wives in all their country. For to make the viptians is more honour and profit to so much that if they commit any no comment judgement, but be it themselves. For they think it meet and proper to give him, with maunnes hande, the heape of money which after so singular a sort was consecrate to god as a holy offering. Thus do they easily observe, because they have a certain rule and do choose them with such discretion, so scately ever chaunceth that the most vertuous, which in respect only of his estate, and so high a dignity, can fail to
And if it should chaunce in deed (which is mutable and fraile), yet by rule and promoted to no might nor honour, it were not to be feared, for the dammage by them should happen, it is not to common wealth. They have so many least, if the honour were comming dignity of the ordre, which eminently ranked, should runne in, because they thinke it hard to
as to be meet for that dignity, to the execution and discharge wherof it is not sufficiente to be endued with mean vertues.

Furthermore, thies priestes be not more estemed of their owne countrey men, then they be of forrein and straung countreis. Which thing maye hereby plainly appere. And I think al so that this is the cause of it. For whiles the arm(i)es be fighting together in open feld, they a litle beside, not farre of, knele vpon their knees in their hallowed vestimentes, holding vp theyr handes to heauen; praying first of all for peace, neste for vyctory of theyr owne parte, but to neyther part a bluddy vyctory. If their host gette the vpper hand, they runne in to the mayne battayle, and restrayne theyre owne men from sleying and cruellye pursuynge theyre vanquyshed ennemies. Whyche ennemies, yf they do but see them and speake to them, yt ys ynoughe for the sauegarde of theyr lyues; and the towchynge of their clothes defendeth and saueth al their gooddes from rauyne and spoyle. Thys thing hath auanced them to so greate wourshyp and trew maiesty emong al nations, that many times they haue aswel preserued their own citizens from the cruel force of their ennemies, as they haue their enemies from the furyous rage of theyre owne men. For yt ys well knownen that when their owne army hathe reculed, and in dyspayre turned backe, and runne away, theyr ennemies fyerslye pursuing with slaughter and spoyle, then the priestes cumming betwene haue stayed the murder, and parted bothe the hostes; so that peace hath bene made and concluded betwine bothe partes vpon equall and in-dyfferent condytions. For there was never anny natyon so fiers, so cruell and rude, but they hadde them in suche reuereuce, that they cownted theyr bodyes hallowed and sanctyfyed, and therefore not to be violentlye and vnreuerentlye towched.

They kepe hollye daye the fyrste and the laste day of euerye moneth and yeare, deuydynge the yeare into monethes; whyche they measure by the course of the moone, as they doo the yeare by the course of the sonne. The fyrste dayes they call in theyr language Cynemernes, and the laste Trapemernes; the whyche woordes maye be interpreted primifeste and finifest;5 or els, in our speache, first feast and last feast.
Their churches be very gorgyous, and not onelye of fyne and curious workemanship, but also (which in the fewenes of them was necessary) very wyde and large, and able to receaue a great company of people.10
But they be all sumwhat darke. Howbeit, that was not donne through ignoraunce in buylding, but as they say by the cownsell of the priestes. Bicause they thought that ouer much light doth disperse mens cogitations; where as in dimme and doutefull lighte they be gathered together, and more earnestly fixed vpon religion and deuocion. Which bicause it is not there of one sort emong all men; and yet all the kindes and fassions of it, thoughhe they be sondry and manifold, agree together in the honour of the deuine nature, as going diuers wayes to one ende; therfore nothing is sene nor hard in the churches, which semeth not to agree indifferently with them all. If there be a distinct kind of sacrifice, peculiare to any seuerall secte, that they execute at home in their owne houses. The common sacrifices be so ordered, that they be no derogatyon nor preiudyce to annye of the pryuate sacryfyces and religions.
Therefore no ymage of annye god is scene in the churche; to the intente it maye be free for every man; to conceyue god by their religion after what likenes and similitude they will. They call vpon no peculiar name of god, but only Mithra. In the which word they all agree together in one nature of the deuine maiestye, whatsoever it be. No prayers be vsed, but such as:
everye man maye boldelye pronownce wythout the offending of anny secte.
They come therefore to the churche the laste day of every moneth and yeare, in the euenynge, yet fastyng, there to gyue thanckes to GOD for that they haue prosperously passed ouer the yeare or monethe, wherof that hollye daye ys the laste daye. The next daye they come to the churche earlye in the mornyng, to praye to GOD that they maye haue good fortune and successe all the newe yeare or monethe, whycche they doo begynne of that same hollye daye. But in the holly dayes that be the laste dayes of the monethes and yeares, before they come to the churche, the wiffes fall downe prostrat before their husbandes feete at home; and the children before the feete of their parentes; confessing and acknowledinge that they haue offended other by some actualle dede, or by omission of their dewty, and desire pardon for their offence. Thus yf anye cloude of preuy displeasure was risen at home, by this satisfaction it is ouer blowen; that they may be present at the sacrifices with pure and charitable mindes. For they be aferd to come there with troubled consciences. Therefore, if they knowe themselfes to beare anye hatred or grudge towards anye man, they presume not to come to the sacrifices before they haue reconcyled themselfes and purged theyre conscyences, for feare of greate vengeaunce and punyshemente for their offence.

When they come thyther, the mengoo into the ryghte syde of the churche, and the women into the left syde. There they place themselfes in suche ordre that all they which be of the male kind in everie houshold sitte before the goodman of the house; and they of the female kynde before the goodwyfe. Thus it is forsene that all their gestures and behauiours be marked and observed abrode of them, by whose au- thoritye and discipline they be gouerned at home. This also they diligentlye see vnto, that the yonger euermore be coupled with his elder; lest, if children be ioyned together, they shold passe ouer that time in childish wantonnes, wherin they ought principallye to conceaue a religious and devout feere towarrdes God; which is the chiefe and almost the only incitation to vertue.

They kill no liuing beast in sacrifice, nor they thinke not that the mercifull clemency of God hath delite in bloud and slaughter; which hath geuen liffe to beastes, to the intent they should liue. They burne frankensence and other sweet sauours, and light also a great numbre of waxe candelles and tapers; nott supposinge this geere to be any thing auaylable to the diuine nature, as nother the prayers of men; but this vnhurtfull and harmeles kind of worship pleaseth them. And by thies sweet sauours, and lightes, and other such ceremonies, men feelle themselfes secretly lifted vp, and encouraged to devotion, with more willynge and fervent hartes. The people weareth in the church white apparell: the priest is clothed in chaungeable coloures, whiche in workemanship be excellent, but in stuffe not verye preitious. For their vestementes be nother embrodered with golde, nor set with precious stones; but they be wrought so fynely and connyngly with diuers fethers of fowles, that the estimacion of no costelye stuffe is able to counteruaile the price of the worke. Furthermore, in thies birdes fethers, and in the dewe ordre of them, whiche is observerd in their settingyng, they saye is conteyned certayn deuyne misteries; the interpretation wherof knowen, whiche is diligentlye tawght by the priestes, they be put in remembraunce of the bountyfull benefites of God towarde them, and of the loue and honoure whiche of their behalfe is dewe to God, and also of their dewties one towarde an other.

When the priest first commeth out of the vestrie, thus apparelled, they fall downe incontinent euery one reverently to the grounde, with so styll silence on euery part, that the very fassion of the thinge striketh into them a certayne feare of God, as though he were there personally presente. When they haue liuen a little space on the grounde, the priest giueth them a signe for to ryse. Then they sing prayses vnto God, whiche they intermixe with instrumentes of musick, for the moste parte of other fassions then thies that we vse in this parte of the worlde. And like as some of owrs bee muche sweter then theirs, so some of theirs doo farre passe owrs. But in one thynge dowteles they goo excedinge farre beyond vs. For all their musicke, both that they playe vpon instrumentes, and that they singe with mans voyce, doth so resemble and expresse naturall affections; the sownd and tune is so applied and made agreable to the thynge; that whether it bee a prayer, or els a dytty of gladnes, of patience, of trouble, of mournynge, or of anger, the fassion of the melodye dothe so repre- sente the meaning of the thing, that it doth wonderfullye moue, stire, pearce, and enflame the hearers myndes.

At the laste the people and the priest together rehearse solemne prayers in woordes, expresslye pro- nounced; so made that everye man may priuatelye applye to hymselfe that which is commonlye spoken of all. In thies prayers everye man recogniseth and knowledgeth God to be hys maker, hys gouernoure, and the principal cause of all other goodnes; thankynge him for so many benefits receaued at hys hande: but namelye, that through the fauoure of God he hath chaunced into that publyque weale, which is moste happye and welthye, and hath chosen that religion whycye he hopeth to be moste true. In the whyche thynge yf he doo annye thynge erre, or yf there bee annye other better then eyther of them is, beynge moore acceptable to GOD, he desiereth hym that he wyll of hys goodnes let hym haue knowledge thereof, as one that is readye too followe what waye soouer he wyll leade hym. But yf thys forme and fassion of a commen wealthe be beste, and his owne religion moste true and perfecte, then he desyreth God to gyue him a constaunte stedfastnes in the same, and to brynge all other people to the same ordre of lyuyng, and to the same opinion of God; onles there be any thynge that in this dyuersitie of religions doth delyte his vnsercheable pleasure. To be shorte, he prayeth hym that after his deathe he may come to hym; but how soone or late, that he dare not assygne or determine. Howebeit, if it myght stande with his maiesties pleasure, he would be muche gladder to dye a paynfull deth and so to go to God, then by long lyuing in worldlye prosperity to bee awaye from hym. When this prayer is sayde, they fall downe to the ground agayne, and a lytle after they ryse vp and go to dynner. And the resydewe of the daye they passe ouer in playes, and exercise of cheualrye.

Nowe I haue declared and descrybyd vnto yowe, as truely as I coulde, the fourme and ordre of that commen wealth, which verely in my iudgement is not onlye the beste, but also that whiche alone of good ryght may clayme and take vpon it the name of a 20 common wealthe or publyque weale. For in other places they speake stil of the commen wealth; but euerye man procureth hys owne pryuate wealthe. Here where nothynge is pryuate, the commen affayres be earnestly loked vpon. And truely on both partes they haue good cause so to do as they do. For in other countreys who knoweth not that he shall sterue for honger, onles he make some seuerall prouision for hymself, though the commen wealthe floryshe neuer so muche in ryches? And therefore he is compelled, euen of verye necessitie, to haue regarde to hym selfe rather then to the people, that is to saye, to other. Contrarywyse, there where all thynge be commen to euerye man, it is not to be dowted that anye man shal lacke anye thynge necessarye for hys pryuate vses, so that the commen store houses and barnes be sufficientlye stored. For there nothynge is distrybuted after a nyggyshe sorte, nother there is any poore man or begger. And though no man haue any thynge, yet euerye man is ryche. For what can be more ryche, then to lyue ioefullye and merylye without all griefe and pensifenes; not caryng for hys owne lyuing, nor vexed or troubled with hys wyfes importunate com- playntes, not drydyng pouertie to his sonne, nor sorrowwyng for his dowyghters dowrey? Yea, they take no care at all for the lyuyng and wealthe of themsefes and all theirs; of theire wyfes, theire chyldren, theire nephews, theire childrens chyldren, and all the suc- cession that euer shall followe in theire posteritie. And yet, bysydes thys, there is no lesse prouision for them that were ones labourers, and be nowe weake and impotent, then for them that do nowe laboure and take payne.

Heere nowe woulde I see yf anye man dare be so bolde, as to compare with thys equytie the iustice of other nations. Among whom, I forsake God, if I can fynde any signe or token of equitie and iustice. For what iustice is this, that a ryche goldsmythe or an vsurer, or, to be shorte, any of them, whyche other doo nothyng at all; or els that whiche they do is suche, that it is not very necessary to the commen wealthe; should haue a pleaasaut and a welthy lyuynge, other by Idilnes, or by vnnecessary busynes? when in the meane tyme poore labourers, carters, yronsmythes, carpenters, and plowmen, by so great and continual toyle, as drawyng and bearying beasts be skant able to susteine; and agayn so necessary toyle that with out it no commen wealth were able to continewe and endure one yere; do yet get so harde and poore a lyuing, and lyue so wretched and miserable a lyfe, that the state and condition of the labouring beastes maye seme muche better and welthier. For they be not put to so contynuall laboure, nor their 35 lyuynge is not muche worse; yea, to them much pleaasauter; takynge no thowghte in the meane season for the tyme to come. But thies seilie poore wretches be presently tormented with barreyne and vnfrutefull labour. And the remembrance of their poor indigent and begerlye olde age kylleth them vp. For their dayly wages is so lytle that it will not suffice for the same daye; muche lesse it yeldeth any ouer plus, that may dayly be layde vp for the relyefe of olde age.

Is not thys an vnjust and an vnkynd publyque weale, whyche gyueth great fees and rewardes to gentelmen, as they call them, and to goldsmythes, and to suche other, whiche be other ydell persones or els onlye flatterers, and deuysers of vayne pleasures; and, of the contrary parte, maketh no gentle prouision for poore plowmen, coliars, laborers, carters, yronsmythes, and carpenters; without whome no commen wealth can continewe? But when it hath abused the laboures of their lusty and flowringe age, at the laste, when they be oppressed with elde age and syckenes, being nedye, poore, and indigent of all thynges; then, forgettynge theire so many paynfull watchynges, not remembrynge theire so many and so great benefytes; recompenseth and acquyteth them moste vnkyndly with myserable death. And yet besides this the riche men not only by priuate fraud, but also by commen lawes, do euery day plucke and snatche away from the poore some parte of their daily liuing. So, where as it semed before uniuste to recompense with vnkindnes their paynes that haue bene beneficiall to the publique weale, nowe they haue to this their wrong and vnjuste dealinge (whiche is yet a muche worse pointe), geuen the name of iustice, yea, and that by force of a law.

Therfore when I consider and way in my mind all thies commen wealthes which now a dayes any where do florish, so god helpe me, I can perceave nothing but a certein conspiracy of riche men, procuringe theire owne commodities vnder the name and title of the commen wealth. They inuent and deuise all meanes and craftes, first how to kipe safely without feare of lesing that they haue vniustly gathered together; and next how to hire and abuse the woorke and labour of the poore for as litle money as may be. Thies deuyses when the riche men haue decreed to be kept and obsuered for the commen wealthes sake, that is to saye, for the wealth also of the poore people, then they be made lawes. But thies most wicked and vicious men, when they haue by their vnsatiable couetousnes deuided emong themselfes all those things which wold haue suffised all men, yet howe farre be they from the wealth and felicity of the vtopian commen wealth? Of the which in that all the desire of moneye with the vse therof is utterly secluded and bannisshed, howe great a heape of cares is cut away? How great an occasion of wickednes and mischiefe is plucked vp by the rotes? For who knoweth not that fraud, theft, rauine, brauling, quarelling, striffe, chiding, contention, murder, treason, poisoning; which by dayly punishmentes are rather revenged then refrained;
do dye when money dieth? And also that feare, griefe, care, laboures, and watchinges, do perishe, even the very same moment that money perissbeth? Yea, pouerty it selfe, which only seemed to lacke money, if money were gone, it also wold decrease and vanishe away.

And that you may perceaeue this more plainly, consider with your selfes some barrein and vnfruetfull yeare, wherin many thousandes of people haue starued for honger. I dare be bolde to say, that in the end of that penury so much corne or grain might haue bene found in the riche mens barnes, if they had bene searched, as being deuided emong them, whome famine and pestilence hath killed, no man at all should haue felt that plaghe and penury. So easely might men gett their liuinge, if that same worthye princesse, lady money, did not alon stoppe vp the way betwene vs and our liuing; whiche a goddes name was very excellently deuised and inuented, that by her the way therto should be opened. I am sewer the ryche men perceauce thys, nor they be not ignoraunte how much better yt werre to lacke noo necessarye thynge then to abounde with ouermuch superfuyte; to be rydde owte of innumerable cares and trowbles, then to be besieged wyth greate ryches. And I dowte not that other the respecte of euery mans priuate commoditie, or els the aucthority of oure sauioure Christe (which for his great wisdom could not but know what were best, and for his inestimable goodnes 10 cold not but counsell to that which he knew to be best) wold haue brought all the wordle long agoo into the lawes of this weale publique, if it were not that one only beast, the princesse and mother of all mischiefe, pride, doth withstonde and let it. She measureth not 15 wealth and prosperity by here own commodities, but by the miseries and incommodities of other. She wold not by her good will be made a goddes, if there were no wretches left, whom she might be lady ouer to mocke and scorne; ouer whose miseries her felicity 20 might shine, whose pouerty she might vexe, torment, and encrease by gorgiously setting furthe her riches. This hell hound crepeth in to mens hartes, and plucketh them backe from entering the right pathe of liffe; and is so depely roted in mens brestes, that 25 she can not be plucked out.

This forme and fassion of a weale publique, which I wold gladly wishe vnto all nations, I am glad yet that it hath chaunced to the Vtopians; which haue followed those institutions of liffe, wherby they haue laid such fondations of their common wealth, as shall continew and last, not only wealthely, but also, as farre as mans wit maye judge and coniecture, shall endure for euer. For seinge the chiefe causes of ambition and sedition with other vices be plucked vp by the rootes and abandoned at home, there can be no ieopardye of domesticall dissention; which alone hathe caste vnder fote and broughte to noughte the well fortified and strongly defenced wealth and riches of many cities. But for asmuch as perfect concord remaineth, and holsome lawes be executed at home, the enuy of all forrein princes be not able to shake or moue the empire, though they haue many tymes long ago gone about to do it, beinge euermore dreuen backe.

Thus when Raphaell hadde made an ende of his tale, though manye thinges came to my mind which in the manners and lawes of that people semed to be instituted and founded of no good reason, not only in the passion of their cheualry and in their sacrifices and religions, and in other of their lawes, but also, yea and chiefly, in that which is the principall fondacion of al their ordinaunces, that is to saye, in the communitie of their liffe and liuinge, without any occupieng of money; by the whyche thynge onelye all nobilitie, magnificence, wourship, honour, and maiestie, the true ornamentes and honoures, as the common opinion is, of a common wealth, utterly be ouerthrown and destroyed; yet, bicause I knew that he was wery of talkinge, and was not sure whether he coulde abide that any thing shoulde be said againste hys minde; speciallye bicause I remembred that he had reprehended this fault in other, which be aferd least they shoulde seme not to be wise enough, onles they could find some fault in other mens inuentiones: thersfore I, praising both their institutions and his communication, toke him by the hand, and led him into supper; saying that we wold chuse an other time to way and examine the same matters, and to talke wyth him more at lardge therin. Whiche wold to God it might ones come to passe. In the mean time as I can not agree and consent to all thinges that he said; being els without dowte a man singularly well learned, and also in all wordely matters exactely and profoundely experienced; so must I nedes confesse and graunt, that many thinges be in the vtopian weal publique, which in our cities I may rather wissh for then hoope after.

Thus endeth the afternones talke of Raphaell Hythlodaye concerning the lawes and institions of the Iland of Vtopia.

I Imprinted at London
by Abraham Vele, dwelling in Pauls churchyarde at the sygne of the Lambe. Anno. 1551.
NOTES
BOOK I

Utopia. There can be no doubt that More compounded the name from ou and τόπος, for in his letter to Erasmus dated London, 1517, he speaks of his book Utopia by the name of ‘Nusquama,’ and in a second letter to him dated September 3, 1517, he says ‘Nusquamam nostram nusquam bene scriptam ad te mitto’ (Erasmi Opera, ed. Leyden, 1703; tom. iii. part ii. pp. 1629 and 1664); nor can there be the smallest doubt that ‘Nusquama’ was coined from ‘Nusquam’; as is borne out by Budé’s letter to Lupset prefixed to the Utopia—‘Utopia vero insula quam etiam Udepotiam appellari audio,’ ‘Udepotiam’ being obviously a play on οὐδέποτε. But, the play on ou and ou being so obvious, it is not surprising that that play on the words became common; so the Poet Laureate of the Island is made to say ‘Utopia priscis dicta ob infrequentiam,

Nunc civitatis aemula Platonicae . . .
Eutopia merito sum vocanda nomine.’

See ‘Hexastichon Anemolii Poetae Laureati,’ in the preliminary matter to the Utopia. But this must not mislead us, as it has misled Dibdin, Bailey, the Italian translator, and others.

The word, as Scaliger observed, is not legitimately formed. [See for an interesting discussion on the subject Notes and Queries, seventh series, vol. v. pp. 101-2, 229-31.] Rabelais nowhere mentions More, but he has borrowed the name Utopia (Pantagruel, bk. ii. ch. xxviii; bk. iii. ch. i), just as he has borrowed his Amaurots and his kingdom of Achory from him (Id. bk. ii. ch. xxiv). Cf. too his island of Medamoth (Nowhere) (Μηδαμώθη), Id. bk. iv. ch. ii. It has been conjectured, but quite groundlessly, that the Englishman Thaumast (Pantagruel, bk. ii. ch. xviii-xx) was intended for More.

P. 1, l. 9. king of Castell. Charles V, afterwards (1519) Emperor, was at this time (1515) a youth of fifteen; he had been proclaimed King of Castile on the death of his grandfather Ferdinand in January, 1516 (see Introduction).

1. 13. cuthebert Tunstall. Born in 1474 at Hackforth in the North Riding of Yorkshire. He studied both at Oxford and Cambridge, and was appointed to several ecclesiastical preferments, including the Prebend of Stowe Longa, Lincoln, and the Archdeaconry of Chester. In May, 1515, he was appointed Ambassador to Brussels, as is here recorded, and in the following May he became Master of the Rolls. In 1522 he was made Bishop of London, and in the following year Keeper of the Privy Seal. In 1530 he was translated to the See of Durham. On the accession of Queen Elizabeth he refused to take the oath of allegiance, and was accordingly deprived of his preferment in 1559, and died the same year at Lambeth where he was residing with Archbishop Parker. The high character given by More to Tunstall is not exaggerated; he was honourably distinguished not only by his scholarship but by his humanity. ‘Dispeream si quid habet haec aetas cum eo viro conferendum’ is Erasmus’s expression about him (Ep. 241, c. 1658). For more about Tunstall’s character see Jortin’s Life of Erasmus, vol. I. i.

1. 25. as the Prouerbe sayth. The earliest forms of this proverb appear to be those given by Erasmus (Adag. 1629, p. 12) ‘Lucernam adhibere in meridie,’ and (p. 18) ‘solem adiuvare facibus,’ ‘to bring up a lamp at noonday,’ ‘to assist the sun with torches.’

1. 26. Bruges, the chief mercantile town of Belgium for many centuries. As early as the seventh century it held the rank of a city. But in 1488, on account of a rising by its citizens against the Archduke Maximilian, it was deprived of its privileges, and thenceforth lost its commercial importance, which was for the most part transferred to Antwerp.

1. 29. Marcgrauae. This title (= count of the marches), originally a territorial title possessed by the Princes of the Empire, came to be applied to the chief magistrate of Bruges.

1. 31. George Temsice. Georgius a Tempseca (de Theimsecke) was a native of Bruges, and wrote a history of Artois (Lupton); beyond these facts nothing seems to be known about him.

1. 9. Bruxelle, Brussels, a French form of the word, now spelt Bruxelles.
1. 15. Peter Gyles. Petrus Gillius, or Aegidius, to whom More dedicated the Utopia, was the son of Nicholas, 'quaestor urbis,' and was born at Antwerp in or about 1486. He was a pupil of Erasmus, who not only directed his studies, but remained through life his cordial friend. See the many affectionate letters addressed to him in Erasmus's correspondence. The Epithalamium in Erasmus's Colloquia (Opera Omnia, ed. 1703, vol. i. pp. 746–9) was composed in honour of his marriage. He had been made town clerk (Stadt schreiber) of Antwerp in 1510. Erasmus speaks of him in the highest terms in the Epithalamium as 'candidissimus ille iuvenis et omnibus politioris literaturae deliciis expolitissimus.' It would appear that Erasmus recommended More and Tunstall to Giles. (See Erasmus, Letter clv.) Giles was an accomplished Latin poet. He died Nov. 11, 1533. The character which More gives of him is amply borne out by what Erasmus says of him. See particularly Epistolae, cc, cciii, and Appendix, Epist. cxv.

1. 19. the yong man. Giles would be at this time about twenty-nine.

1. 28. vsithe... dyssymulatyon. This is a very diffuse rendering of the original, which is 'nemini longius abest fucus' (from no man is paint—artifice—farther off). The distinction between simulation and dissimulation which Robynson was thinking of is given in the well-known line 'Quod non es simulas, dissimulasque quod es,' 'You pretend to be what you are not, and you pretend not to be what you are.'

P. 3, 1. 1. when I hadde herde. Ed. i, 'as I was herynge.'

1. 2. our ladies churche. The Cathedral of Notre Dame at Antwerp, which had been completed only a few years before, though begun early in the fifteenth century. It is still one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture on the Continent, with a spire 366 feet high.

1. 5. the service beynge done. Ed. i reads 'when the deuyne was done.' The adjective seems occasionally to have stood alone in this sense. The N. E. D. quotes (Will of Vavesour) 'to sing deyvnge for my sowle.' Burnet paraphrases the original 'peracto sacro,' 'as I was returning home from Mass.'

1. 9. homely, plainly, carelessly. Cf. Chaucer, Prol. 325 'He rood but hoomly in a medlee cote,' and Latimer (Second Sermon before Edward VI), 'Homilyes, they may well be called, for they are homely handeled.' Dr. Lupton thinks there may be some allusion to the careless way in which More, according to Ascham, wore his gown (see Scholemaster, ed. Mayor, p. 180).

1. 10. fauvour, appearance, aspect, or face, a common use of the word in sixteenth-century English. Cf. Skelton, Poems against Garnishe, 'The favyr of your face is voyd of all grace'; and Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 5. 73 'to alter favour ever is to fear.'

This sense survives in the term 'ill-favoured,' 'well-favoured.'

1. 11. But when thys. Ed. 2 reads 'But the sayde Peter seyng me, came vnto me & saluted me.'

1. 23. Than I coniected, i.e. 'then.' 'Then' is frequently spelt 'than' in older English. The two words 'than' and 'then' like tum and tam, quum and quam in Latin are closely connected, and are indeed simple variants of the same word. (See Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, Ed. 1883, p. 52.)

1. 27. Palynure. Palinurus was the pilot of Aeneas. Virg. Aen. iii. 202, and v. 832 seqq.

1. 28. Ulisses. Ulysses the son of Laertes, the Greek chief, and Lord of Ithaca, whose adventures after the fall of Troy are related in Homer's Odyssey.

1. 29. Plato. Plato is said to have visited Egypt, Sicily, and other foreign places for the purpose of acquiring knowledge. To his travels there are many references in ancient writers. Cf. Cicero, De Finibus, v. 29, Valerius Maximus, viii. 7, § 3, and Diogenes Laertius, iii. 6.

1. 30. Raphaell Hythlodaye. Dr. Lupton derives this name from ἰδιον, babble or idle talk, and δαίειν, to distribute. But is it not more natural to suppose that the derivation is from δαίος in its secondary sense of 'skilled in,' 'knowing in,' from δαίω, or rather δαίγαυ? Stephens's Thesaurus under δαίος paraphrases ἐπιστέφω (skilled in) and translates 'peritus,' quoting Anth. Plan. iv. 119 to support this sense of the word, which is also preserved in δαίφρων. Dr. Lupton somewhat fancifully suggests that the Christian name Raphael is borrowed from Raphael Volaterranus, the voluminous author of the Commentarii Urbani printed in 1511. This is at any rate more plausible than the theory of the French translator (1559), who supposes that it is borrowed from the Archangel Raphael, and is meant to indicate the spiritual energy at work in the composition of the romance.
1. 37. Senecaes. Lucius Annaeus Seneca, the Roman philosopher, and tutor of the Emperor Nero, by whom he was subsequently ordered to put himself to death. He flourished during the first half of the first century, dying A.D. 65. His philosophical writings are certainly more original than is common with Romans when treating of such subjects.

Ciceroes. Marcus Tullius Cicero, the great Roman orator and man of letters; born B.C. 106, assassinated B.C. 43. The reference is to his voluminous philosophical writings.

doinges. Now a rare use of the word as a synonym for ‘works,’ and always in plural in this sense.

1. 4. Amerike vespuce. Amerigo Vespucci was born at Florence, March 9, 1451, the son of a Notary. After passing some time as a clerk in the service of the Medici he entered the service of Juanoto Bernardi, a Florentine merchant who had fitted out the second expedition of Columbus in 1493. This brought Amerigo into contact with the spirit of exploration and travel so energetic at that time, and in 1497 he embarked on his first voyage. Between that date and 1504 he made, according to his own account, no less than four voyages, of which an account is given, drawn partly from his own narrative in the Quatuor Americi Vesputii Navigationes—the work referred to by More—appended to Cosmographiae Introductio, printed at St. Dié in the Vosges in 1507. For the portion of the narrative on which the Utopia was founded, see Introduction. After his return to Lisbon from his fourth voyage Amerigo went back to Spain and settled at Seville, where he died February 22, 1512. For an excellent account of him and a discussion of the attempt made to attribute to him the honour of having anticipated Cabot and Columbus in the discovery of the American Continent, see Major’s Life of Prince Henry of Portugal, p. 366 seqq.

1. 13. Gulike. A very singular misinterpretation of More’s Latin by Robynson. As he found Castellum printed with a capital C he supposed it to be the name of a place, and finding, as Dr. Lupton conjectures, in the old dictionaries that Castellum was the Latin name for Jülich (the French Juliers, or as it was sometimes spelt, Gulike, a town twenty-three miles west of Cologne) he assumed that it was this place. More is no doubt referring to the passage in the Quatuor Navigationes (see Introduction), where it is described how a garrison or factory of twenty-four men with arms and provisions was left in Cape Frio by Vespucci in June, 1504: the words being ‘Relictis igitur in castello praefato Christicolis xxiii,’ &c.

1. 14. for hys mindes sake. Lat. ‘ut obtemperaretur animo eius,’ to comply with his inclination.

The second saying is, as Dr. Lupton notes, plainly an adaptation of the saying of Anaxagoras (preserved by Cicero, Tusc. i. § 104), who, on his friends asking him, when he was dying at Lampsacus, whether in the event of his death he would wish to be carried to his country Clazomenae, replied ‘There is no necessity; for on all sides the way to the shades below is equally long,’ ‘Nihil necesse est, inquit, undique enim ad inferos tantundem viae est.’ Cf. Roper’s Life of More, p. 79 (Ed. Singer), where More is represented as saying of his prison the Tower, ‘Is not this house as night heaven as myne owne?’

1. 24. Gulykyans, a mistranslation of Castellanorum, i.e. those in the fort (see note on Gulike, above).

1. 26. Calyquit. Now Calicut; a seaport town in the province of Malabar, India. It was the first Indian port visited by Vasco de Gama in May, 1498. The name of the place is properly Colicodu.

1. 28. nothynge lesse then lokyd for. Anything rather than expected, quite unexpected by any one. The original has ‘praeter spem’; N. E. D. quotes Greneway’s Tacitus, xxx ‘The Barbarous people know nothing less than engines and subtill devises.’ French ‘rien moins que.’

1. 35. haylsede. Hailed, greeted; from Old Norse heilsa, ‘to greet,’ say, hail. N. E. D. quotes from Palsgrave, ‘I haylse, or greete, je salue.’
P. 5, l. 1. torues. Middle-English plur. of torf, a form of turf. Cf. original ‘in scamno cespitibus herbeis constrato.’ The same sort of seat is mentioned in Chaucer’s Marchantes Tale (990–1), ‘Adoun him sette, Upon a bench of turves, fresh and grene.’

l. 9. harmelesse. Free from harm: uninjured. Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, 2664 ‘To passen harmlesse of that place.’

occupyed. In the earlier English sense of dealing or trading with; N. E. D. quotes Marbeck, Boke of Notes, p. 653 ‘He gained much by occupieing with the Jewes and Christians.’ Cf. Tyndale’s translation of St. Luke xix. 13 ‘Occupy till I come,’—that is, ‘go on trading.’

l. 13. mere. Exactly the Latin merus, pure; cf. our modern expression, ‘pure generosity.’

l. 17. was in botys, i.e. in boats, one of the many variants of ‘boat,’ and of the plural.

l. 21. holsom. Wholesome, but a more correct form, for the word comes directly from the Middle-English holsum, holsom, halsum being suggested by the Icelandic heilsamr (Skeat).

l. 22. lyne equynoctyall, i.e. the equator.

l. 28. owte of fasshyon. A curious translation of the original ‘horrida,’ which simply means ‘rough.’ ‘Fashion’ here = form or shape, so the phrase means ‘out of shape,’ or ‘ill made,’ so, ‘rough, uncouth.’

P. 6, l. 3. borderers. The Lat. has ‘finitimos,’ neighbouring people.

l. 3. occasion, i.e. an opportunity afforded. Almost= the Latin occasio. Cp. Milton, Par. Lost, ix. 480 ‘Let me not let pass Occasion which now smiles.’

l. 11. rydged kyeles. Keels running like a ridge at the bottom of the ships. The original is ‘acuminatas carinas,’ sharpened or pointed.

l. 17. feate; here answers closely to ‘use,’ merely emphasizing that word—the original being simply ‘usus.’

lode stone. Though the polarity of the magnetic needle had been known long before More’s time, it was not, as Dr. Lupton remarks, till the fifteenth century that it seems to have been applied to purposes of navigation.

l. 22. in so doyng, ferther frome care then iepardye; i.e. ‘freer from anxiety than from danger,’ a literal rendering of the Latin ‘securi magis quam tuti.’
1. 25. tourne them. As the Latin shows, 'them' is here the dative, 'shall turn to evil and harm for them.'

1. 31. in an other place. That is, in the Second Book of the Utopia.

1. 36. cyuyle pollycye. Such a course of conduct as becomes citizens living as citizens should live—in the original 'civiliter conviventes.' Cf. Starkey's Dialogue between Pole and Lupset: 'I cal the cyuyle lyfe lyuyng togyder in gud and pollytyke ordur, one euer redy to dow gud to a nother, and as hyt were conspyryng togydur in al vertue and honesty' (Ed. J. M. Cowper, Early English Text Soc., p. 11).

P. 7, l. 4. Scyllaes. Scylla, the monster represented by Homer, Odyssey, xii. 85 seqq., and Virgil, Aen. iii. 426 seqq., as residing on one of the two rocks between Italy and Sicily—the 'barking' is Homer's δεινὸν λελακωνία, and Virgil's 'caeruleis canibus resonantia saxa.' For a full description of the monster see Ovid, Met. xiv. 51 seqq.

Celenes. Celaeno was chief of the Harpies; see Virgil, Aen. iii. 211.

Lestrygones. A savage tribe who destroyed eleven of Ulysses' ships with their crews. See Odyssey, x. 82 seqq.

1. 12. ensample=example, the reading of the second edition.

1. 15. intreate. Archaic form of 'entreat,' to deal with or treat of in a specified matter, so 'describe' or 'relate.' Frequently used without the preposition 'of.' Cf. Latimer, 2nd Serm. Convoc. i. 43 'It should be too long to intreate how the children of light are ingendered.'

1. 26. connynge—'knowing,' as we might say. 'Perfecte' is the reading of Ed. 2.

1. 29. geaste wyse, like or after the manner of a guest. The suffix 'wise' from old Saxon 'wisa,' Anglo-Saxon 'wīse,' way, manner, was used more frequently in early English than it is now, though it is stereotyped in the adverbs and adjectives, 'anywise,' 'nowise,' otherwise,' 'sidewise,' 'crosswise,' &c.

1. 31. I wondere greatlye, &c. For the connexion of this passage with More's life see Introduction.

1. 37. are meat. Ed. 2 omits 'are.'

P. 8, l. 5. I passe not greatly for them. A common use of the word in earlier English, meaning 'care' or have regard to. It is almost universally found with the negative, like 'ἀλέγευν in Greek. 'As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not' (Shakespeare, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 2. 156); and Drayton, 'I pass not what it may be' (Question of Cynthia).

1. 17. Naye god forbedde, &c. Robynson's version is here most inadequate and defective. The original Latin is 'Bona verba, inquit Petrus; mihi visum est non ut servias regibus, sed ut inservias. Hoc est, inquit ille, una syllaba plus quam servias'; that is, 'soft and fair,' said Peter, 'I do not mean that you should be a slave to kings, but an assistant to them.' 'This latter,' said Hythlodaye, 'is only a syllable longer than the former': that is, the one is 'servias,' the other 'inservias.' Dr. Lupton paraphrases this as 'service at a Court is only short for servitude.' Robynson omits the passage in Hythlodaye's reply containing the play on the word.

1. 29. greate states... realmes. Robynson's paraphrase of the single word 'Purpurati' of the original. For this sense of 'States' cf. Middleton, Game of Chess, Prol. 'First you shall see the men in order set, States and their Pawns.' So Hexam (quoted in Babees Book) speaks of 'The twelve Peeres or States of the Kingdome of France.'

1. 31. sike. Ed. 2 'sue.'

1. 32. thynke it. Note the imperative mood, 'Do not you think it.'

P. 9, l. 11. For from the prynces. Cf. Starkey's Dialogue, J. M. Cowper (E. E. T. S.), p. 48: 'For lyke as al wyt, reson and sens, felyng, lyfe and al other natural powar sryngeth out of the hart, so from the prynces and rularys of the State commyth al lawys, ordur and pollycy, al justice, vertue and honesty to the rest of thys polytyke body.'

1. 20. nother. See Glossarial Index.

1. 23. moste parte of all princes. This picture of the Princes and Kings of More's time is amply illustrated by Erasmus. Hallam in his Introduction to the Literature of Europe, vol. i. pp. 286, 289, has collected and translated the chief passages in the Adagia bearing on this question. The most remarkable are in the commentary on the adage 'Scarabaeus aquilam quaeirit,' chil. iii, cent. vii, prov. 1, and 'Frons occipitio.' With these compare Philip de Commines, Memoires, bk. i. ch. x; bk. ii. vi; bk. v. xviii. Both especially dwell on their ignorance, selfishness, rapacity, cruelty, tyranny, and indifference to everything except what concerns their ambitions or contributes to their pleasure. The Dialogue between Pole and Lupset dwells with equal emphasis on the injuries inflicted on subjects by these vices and the necessity for reform by curtailing their power. Compare Swift's Gulliver's Travels, part iii. ch. viii: 'Three kings protested to me that in their whole reigns they never did once prefer any person of merit, unless by mistake or treachery of some minister in whom they confided, neither would they do it if they were to live again, and they showed with great strength of reason that their royal throne could not be supported without corruption, because that positive, confident, and restive temper, which virtue infused into a man, was a clog to public business.'

1. 34. sauing that they do shamefully, &c. More may have been thinking of Juvenal's description of the parasite, Sat. iii. 101 seqq.

P. 10, l. 2. So both the rauen and the ape. An adaptation or another form of proverbs quoted by Erasmus (Adagia, chil. iv. cent. x) as illustrating 'asinus asino, et sus sui pulcher.'

l. 5. haue despiect at. Hold in contempt. Cf. Chaucer, Melib. 452 'Peradventure Christ hath thee in despit'; Caxton, Golden Legend, 'He hadde in despite fader and moder.'

l. 9. fare, behave. A rare use of the word. Nares quotes Heywood, Troia Britannica, 'His bottles gone, still stands he strangely faring.'

l. 12. disorderes, a variant of dizzards = clowns, jesters, blockheads. The word is found in many forms, 'disarde,' 'dysarde,' 'dyzerde,' and is probably derived from 'diser' (Lat. dicere). N.E. D. quotes Skelton, Image Ipocr.: 'To go gaye With wonderful array As dysardes in a play.' See Glossarial Index.

l. 20. As who should saye, &c. This was the favourite cry of the Obscurantists; see Epistolae obscurorum Virorum, passim.

l. 28. lewde, ouerthwartre. Lewd is here used in the primary sense of unlearned, ignorant (see Glossary). Overthwartre = perversely. So in Nares's Terence, 'obstinate operam dat' is translated 'he deals overthwartly with me'; cf. Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 378 'Necessary it is that among friends there should be some overthwarting.'

l. 33. insurreccion, i.e. the Cornish insurrection of 1497. The men of Cornwall, led by Lord Audley and Flammock an attorney, and one Michael Joseph, marched on London, but were defeated at Blackheath, on June 22 of that year, the leaders being captured and executed. 'There were,' says Hall, 'slaine of the rebels whiche fought and resisted two thousand men and moo.' For a vivid account of this see Hall's Chronicle, Henry VII, sub ann. XII Yere; cf. Holinshed's Chronicles, ed. 1808, vol. iii. p. 515 seq., and Bacon's Henry VII, sub ann. 1497.

1. 38. Jhon Morton. Born either at Bere Regis or Milborne St. Andrew in Dorsetshire about 1420. He received his early education at the Abbey of Cerne, and then went to Balliol College, Oxford. While practising as an advocate in the Court of Arches, he attracted the notice of Cardinal Bourchier, who bestowed on him several preferments besides introducing him to King Henry VI. His fidelity to that unhappy monarch throughout his misfortunes attracted Edward IV, who on his accession took Morton into his councils, appointed him Master of the Rolls in 1473, and Bishop of Ely six years later, and made him one of the executors of his will. Richard III had no love for him, but put him into prison, nominally as a ward of the Duke of Buckingham; he escaped to the Isle of Ely, and shortly after fled in disguise to the Continent, where he joined the Earl of Richmond (subsequently Henry VII), and is said to have been the first to propose the union of the two Houses of York and Lancaster by marriage with Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Edward IV. In 1486 he was made Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1487 Lord Chancellor, and in 1493 created a Cardinal by Pope Alexander VI. He died in September 1500, and was buried in Canterbury Cathedral. More's character of Morton is not corroborated by Bacon, who describes Morton as 'a wise man and an eloquent, but in his nature harsh and haughty, much accepted by the King, but envied by the nobility and hated of the people.' The unpopularity of the deviser of 'Morton's fork' is not difficult to understand.

P. 11, l. 25. in the chiefe of hys youth, 'ab prima fere iuventa'; 'almost from boyhood would be a simpler rendering.

1. 28. tumbled and tossed in the waues of. The first edition reads 'troubled and tossed with'; which is not so near to the Latin, 'variiis fortunae aestibus assidue lactatus.'

1. 33. a certayne laye man. In More's time and previously it was not common for laici—that is, non-clerics—to be acquainted with the law; and therefore More emphasizes the fact that the speaker was a layman.

l. 37. fellones. The derivation of this word is very uncertain; its general meaning is a vile or wicked person, a villain or wretch, and in that sense it is used here. The punishment against which More represents Hythlodaeus protesting continued to be the law in England till 1527 (7 and 8 George IV, c. 28, § 7); see Stephen, Hist. of the Criminal Law in England, vol. i. p. 472. Philanthropists had continually protested against the severity of the penalty, and with More's words may be compared what Starkey says in his Dialogue between Pole and Lupset (ed. Cowper, p. 119): 'Wyth us for every lytly theft, a man ys by and by hengyd wythout mercy or pitie, wych, me semyth, ys agayne nature and humanyte. Specyally when they steyle for necessyte wythout murdor or manslaughter commyttted therein.' The remarks with which Coke, scarcely a century after More's death, concluded his Third Institute may also be compared. —'What a lamentable case it is to see so many Christian men and women strangled on that cursed tree of the gallows, insomuch as if in a large field a man might see together all the Christians that but in one year throughout England came to that untimely and ignominious death, if there were any sparke of grace or charity in him, it would make his heart to bleed for pity and commiseration.' Coke upon Littleton, Epilogue to Third Inst. (Ed. Hargrave and Butler, vol. vi. p. 244).

l. 38. were for the most part. Robynson is not quite accurate in his rendering of the Latin original, 'quos passim narratam nostrunquam suspendi viginti in una cruce,' who, he said, were being hanged in all quarters, sometimes twenty at a time on one gallows.

P. 12, l. 8. the limites (of) Justyce. Ed. 1 reads 'of the lymytes Justyce.'

l. 11. refrayne men. The proper sense of the word refrenare, 'hold in with a bit.' So Proverbs i. 15 'my son, refrain thy feet from their path.' Ed. 2 reads 'refrayne and withhold.'

l. 32. blacke heath filde. See note on p. 10, l. 33.

l. 33. warres in Fraunce. On the death of Francis Duke of Brittany at the end of 1488, Henry VII, who had promised to protect his interests and was under great obligations to him, sent aid to his daughter Anne, whose territory was being overrun by the French king, Charles VIII. In October, 1492, he laid siege to Boulogne, but being secretly in treaty with King Charles, he soon terminated the expedition at the peace of Etaples on Nov. 14, 1492, being contented to receive an indemnity.

1. 37. because warre lyke the tyde ebbeth and floweth. This was altered in the second edition to 'foras-much as warres have their ordinarie recourses,' which is also the reading of the subsequent editions.

P. 13, l. 5. dorres = drones. The word is said to be derived phonetically from the noise made by the insect. O.E. 'dora.' The word is vaguely used, being applied to a humble bee, a hornet, or a drone, as here.

1. 6. polie. Properly to remove the top or head (poll), so to cut the hair, and then generally to rob or pillage. It is frequently found in combination with 'pil'; so Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 6 'Which pols and pils the poore in piteous wise.'

1. 7. reysing their rentes. This account of the poverty and misery prevalent in England and Europe, as well as of the causes of them, finds abundant illustration in contemporary testimony. The details are well summed up by Brewer. 'The arbitrary rule of its monarchs bent on their own aggrandizement, and careless of the improvement of their people,—the disputes among their Councillors, agreed in one point only, to flatter and mislead their sovereigns—the wide separation between the luxury of the rich and the hopeless misery of the poor—the prevalence of crime—the severe execution of justice, earnest for punishment but regardless of prevention—the frequency of capital punishment—the depopulation of villages,—the engrossing by a few hands of corn and wool—the scarcity of meat—the numbers of idle gentlemen without employment—of idle servingmen and retainers turned adrift on a life of vagabondism.' Letters and Papers of the Reign of Henry VIII, vol. ii. part i. Preface, p. ccxxii. For the grievance involved in raising the rents, see the Preambles to the Acts of 7 and 25 Henry VIII, and the 'Prayer for Landlords' in one of Edward's Liturgies, quoted in Cowper's Introduction to the Select Works of Robert Crowley (E. E. T. S.), p. xxii: 'We heartily pray Thee that they who possess the grounds, pastures and dwelling-places of the earth may not rack and stretch out the rents of their houses and lands nor yet take unreasonable fines and incomes ... but so let them out to others that the inhabitants thereof may both be able to pay their rents and also honestly to live.' See also Crowley's sermon, The Way to wealth, where, speaking of landlords, he says: 'some have purchased and some taken by leases whole alleys, whole rentes, whole rows, yea whole streets and lanes, so that the rents be reysed, some double, some triple and some four fould'; and his epigram on 'Rente Razers.' Emphatic expression is given to the same grievance in Brinklow's Complaynt of Roderyck Mors, in Starkey's Dialogue. The common term for landlords in Latimer's Sermons is 'rent raisers.'

1. 12. a greate flocke or trayne of ydell, &c. Cf. Starkey's Dialogue between Pole and Lupset (ed. Cowper, p. 77): 'Fyrst loke what an idol route our nobul men kepe and nyrusch in theyr housys, wych do no thyng els but cary dyschys to the tabul and ete them when they have downe, and aftur gyyung themselfe to huntyng, hawkynge, dysyng, cardyng and al other idol pastymes and vayne.' And these men, as ample testimony shows, when dismissed by their masters, or on the death of their masters, were turned loose on the country to swell the number of beggars.

1. 16. incontinent=immediately, forthwith; a common word in the English of the 15th-17th centuries, and in the adverbial form 'incontinently' not quite obsolete.

1. 25. appayred their health. Injure or damage, impair; cf. Prynne, Power of Parliament, ii. 71 'The ancient laws be greatly appaired.' Originally from the Lat. adpeiorare through the Old-French empeire. The word has a curious history. The prefix of the early ampayre, or anpayre, was subsequently treated like the native an- before a consonant and reduced to a- which in the fifteenth century was frequently though erroneously spelt ap. Caxton restored the Fr. form empeyr, empayr, which soon afterwards passed into the now current form impair. The word, common enough before, is rarely used after the sixteenth century.

1. 34. iette. Strut and swagger, boast or 'talk big.' See Glossarial Index.

P.14, l. 1. stomaches—'temper,' 'inclination,' 'courage.' Cf. Shakespeare: 'He which hath no stomach to this fight, Let him depart' (Henry V, iv. 3. 35). The transition to this meaning comes from its use for 'appetite,' e.g. 'a good stomach for roast beef.'

II. 7-9. theues. As the Latin context makes a distinction, using 'fures' in ll. 7 and 8, and 'latrones' in l. 9, this should be preserved in the English; and Burnet very properly, in l. 9, translates 'robbers.'

1. 14. Fraunce... plage. Fortescue, in the third chapter of his Governance of England, comments on this custom and its inconveniences in France, adding: 'Lo, this is the fruit of his lus regale.' With More's remarks on mercenaries may be compared the similar remarks of Macchiavelli, Il Principe, cap. xii.

1. 20. wisefooles and very archedoltes. In the original this is all comprised in the one word 'Morosophi,' which is the plural of a latinized Greek word μωρόσοφοι, 'foolishly wise,' from Lucian (Alexander, 40). Pope has imitated the Oxymoron; 'the wisest fool much time has ever made.' Moral Essays, Epist. II. 124.

1. 21. archedoltes. 'As a prefix the usual sense of 'arch-' (Gk. ἀρχός) is 'chief,' 'principal,' 'high,' occasionally 'first in time,' 'original,' 'initial,' but in modern use it is prefixed intensively to words of bad or odious sense, as 'arch-traitor,' 'arch-enemy'" (N. E. D.).

1. 25. fayne. Ed. 2 reads 'forced.'

1. 28. Saluste. The quotation is from Sallust, Cat. xvi 'Ne per otium torpescerent manus aut animus.'

1. 34. the Romaynes, &c. Macchiavelli notices the ruinous effects on Rome and Carthage of employing mercenaries. With regard to the eastern nations, More may, as Dr. Lupton says, have had in his mind the Janizaries and Mamelukes. Dr. Lupton quotes Gibbon on the Mamelukes: 'The rage of these ferocious animals who had been let loose on the strangers was provoked to devour their benefactor' (Decline and Fall, ch. lix).

P. 15, l. 3. inured. Ed. 1 reads vrede = 'ured.'

1. 10. vplandishe. Belonging to the uplands or country-parts; so 'rude' or 'boorish.' Lumby quotes Puttenham, Art of Poetry (ed. Arber, p. 157): 'any uplandish village or corner of a realme where there is no resort but of poor rusticall people.'

1. 16. yf they. Edd. 1 and 2 read 'they yf.'

1. 20. spill. To injure or destroy. A. S. spillan, an assimilated form of spildan, 'to destroy'; in this sense it became obsolete in the seventeenth century.

1. 25. avayleable. 'Serviceable,' 'that may avail.' warre sacke = 'war's sake.' We frequently find 'sake' joined with an uninflected noun in Elizabethan English; so Shakespeare, 1 Henry IV, i. 2. 174 'for recreation sake,' and As You Like It, iii. 2. 271 'for fashion sake.' It is found even now in nouns ending in e, 'for experience sake,' to avoid the clash of s.

1. 29. noyous = 'troublesome,' 'grievous,' and Middle-English 'noyous' = 'noyes.' Cf. Chaucer, 'Thou art noyous for to carye' (House of Fame, i. 574); and Spenser, 'noyous' injuries (F. Q. ii. 9. 16).

1. 31. not onlye the = 'not the only.'

1. 35. your shepe, that were wont. More now enters specifically on the chief grievances of the time, namely (a) turning the arable land into pasture for the purpose of breeding sheep for their wool, and (b) the wrong done by the enclosures. The best comprehensive commentaries on More's view are the Preambles and First Sections of the Statutes 7 and 25 Henry VIII, and Starkey's Dialogue between Pole and Lupset, edited by J. M. Cowper for the Early English Text Society. To these may be added the 'Petition to Henry VIII' (cited in Furnivall's Ballads from Manuscripts, vol. i. 101-2); the ballad 'Now-a-dayes' and that of 'Vox populi, Vox Dei' in the same collection; Robert Crowley's Sermons and Epigrams (E. E. T. S.); Henry Brinklow's Complaynt of Roderyck Mars, printed by the same society; William Roy's Rede me and be Nott Wrothe; and Certayne causes gathered together wherein is shewed the decaye of England only by the great multitude of Shepe, to the utter decay of household kepying, mayntenance of men, death of corne and other notable dyscommodityes approved by syxe olde Proverbes, which was a supplication to Edward VI's Council 1550-3, also printed by the E. E. T. S. The sermons of Lever edited by Arber, and the sermons of Latimer edited for the Parker Society, throw much light on these subjects. These publications, ranging between about 1515 and 1553, very exactly illustrate every detail of More's terrible picture. Dr. Furnivall's Preface to the Ballads from Manuscripts and Mr. Cowper's Preface to Starkey's Dialogue may be consulted with advantage.

P. 16, l. 1. They consume, &c. Cf. Petition to Henry VIII (1514): 'The ploughes be decayed and the fferme houses and also other dwelling houses in many townes, so that where was in a towne XX or XXX dwelling houses they be now decayed ploughes and all, and all the people clene goon and decayed and no more parisses in many parishes, but a nettard and a sheppard, or a warner and a sheppard in the stede of 60 or 80 persones. Cf., too, ballad of 'Now-a-days':—

'The townes go down, the land decayes;
Off cornefeydes, playne layes;
Great men makin the now-a-days,
A sheepecott in the Churche.'

(Furnivall's Ballads from MSS. i. 97.)

1. 5. certeyn Abbotes. Many and bitter are the complaints made in the ballads, and many and emphatic the supplications and protests against this action on the part of the Church. See particularly A supplication for the Beggers, attributed to Simon Fish, which was answered by More himself, and Roy's Rede me and be Nott Wrothe:—

'The abbes then full of covetyse, Whom possessions could not suffice,
Ever more and more encroachynge,' but see the whole passage (ed. Arber), pp. 99-100, and A proper Dyalogue, ed. Arber, a full and elaborate review of those grievances, emphasizing and amply illustrating, what is condensed in the couplet:—

'Our patrimonie given away is Unto these Wolffes of the Clergye.'

See the complaint made to the Commons (Hall's Chronicle, Nov. 1529) that 'Priests beying surveiers stuardes and officers to Bishoppes, Abbotes and other spiritual heddes had and occupied Fermes, Graunges and grazing, in every country so that the poore husband men coulde have nothyng but of them; and yet for that they should pay derely.'

holy men. Of course satirical, the abbots being considered the chief offenders in this respect. The Civil Wars no doubt were a source of much loss to them, as the Black Death in the fourteenth century had been before. As they were not able to look after their lands, the property lost its value as productive soil, and they were only too glad to be able to derive any profit from their neglected estates; but it does not appear that they were more rapacious than lay landlords. See Gasquet's Henry VIII and the English Monasteries, vol. i. pp. 30-5.

1. 23. coueuyne = fraud. The word is French covin, covine, from Low-Latin convenium, and properly means a coming together for agreement, so a compact or agreement.
From this it passed into meaning a fraudulent agreement, and since the fifteenth century is generally used in a bad sense.

1. 27. pore, sylie, wretched soules. For all this see the Ballads passim and Starkey's Dialogue. Ascham did not exaggerate when he wrote: "Vita quae nunc vivitur a pluri-mis, non vita sed miseria est"; the life nowadays which most live is not life, but misery. 'Sylie' is of course used in the earlier sense of 'simple, 'innocent,' being derived from A.S. sælig, happy, prosperous; the word then, following the analogy of εὐθὸς in Greek, came to be used in a derogatory sense.

1. 35. abyde the sale. This obscure phrase can best be explained by reference to the Latin, 'haud magno uendi-bilem, etiam si manere possit emptorem,' i.e. their household stuff would not be worth much, even though it could await a buyer (an advantageous time for selling).

P. 17, l. 1. God wote. Literally 'God knows,' 'wote' being the third person singular present indicative of wit (A.S. witan, to know). It passed into a mere formula of emphasis. Ed. 2 changes the 'God wote' of the first edition into 'forsothe.'

1. 2. a beggyng. The common form of the verbal substantive still commonly used dialectally. This prefix, a form of 'on,' appears also in aboard, afloat, &c. So in A.V., John xxii. 3 'I goe a fishing.'

1. 6. For one shepherde... Cf. Latimer. 'For where as have been a great many house-holders and inhabitants there is now but a shepherd and his dog.' (First Sermon before Edward VI.)

1. 7. Robynson has omitted a sentence in the Latin preceding this paragraph: 'Nam rusticae rei, cui assueuerunt, nihil est quod agatur, ubi nihil seritur,' which Burnet thus translates:—'For there is no more occasion for country labour, to which they have been bred, when there is no arable ground left.'

1. 11. the pryce of wolle. Cf. the tract Certayne Causes (Furnivall's Ballads from MSS. vol. i. p. 23): 'The more shepe the dearer is the wool'; and Becon's Jewel of Joy quoted by Dr. Lupton: 'Those beastes which were created of God for the nourishment of man do nowe deceive man... Since they ["greedy gentlemen''] began to be shepe maysters and feders of cattell we neyther had vyttayle nor cloth of any resonable pryce.'

1. 20. morreyyn=murrain, cattle plague; from O.F.
morine, M. E. murrin, moreyne, ultimately from Latin mori. It is not easy to identify the epidemic to which More refers. Dr. Lupton observes that the extreme wet of the year 1506 must have been injurious to cattle; and it would seem from Hecker's Epidemics of the Middle Ages, translated by Babington (p. 204), that there was a severe visitation of it in Germany and France. But in a state paper in the Record Office cited by Furnivall (Ballads from MSS. vol. i. p. 18), we find:—'the same selff yere that the warre ended there fielle as great a generall Rott and Morregn amongst Cat-telle as ever was seen eny time forty yeres before.' Brewer supposes that this refers to the termination of the French wars of 1523-5, but it may refer to the war concluded by the Treaty of Étaples in 1492: if so, this would fix the year.

1. 22. And though the number of shepe, &c. Robynson's version is inadequate. The Latin is 'Quod si maxime increscat ouium numerus, precio nihil decrescit tamen; quod earum, si monopolium appellari non potest, quod non unus uendit, certe oligopolium est.' The latter clause is thus rendered by Burnet, 'Though they cannot be called a Monopoly, because they are not engrossed by one Person, yet they are in so few Hands, and these are so rich,' &c. More's antithesis between monopolium and oligopolium—a word coined by himself—cannot be rendered in English. For the remark that though the number of sheep increase the price does not fall, see Certayne Causes (Furnivall, Ballads, i. 23), 'The more shepe, the dearer is the wool.'

1. 37. incommoditie. Inconvenience. French in-commodité. Cf. Higden viii. 241: 'In the ende of harveste were so moche wete and reyne—whereby many incommo-dities followed.' The word is not quite obsolete in this sense.

1. 38. make dearth, i.e. raise the price. The Latin has 'reddunt caras.' M. E. derthe=dearness.

P. 18, l. 8. in the whiche thyng. That is, hospitalitie, as we gather from what follows.

1. 9. this great dearth, &c. Cf. Certayne Causes, cited by Furnivall (Ballads, i. 23): 'And where that the said persons were wont to have meate, drynche, rayment and wages, payinge Scot and lot to God and to our Kyng, now there is nothing kept there but onely Shepe . . . (they) go forthe from shyre to shyre to be scattered thus abroad . . . and for lacke of maysters by compulsyon dryuen, some of them to begge, and some to steale.'

1. 16. this wretched beggerye. On this The Dialogue between Pole and Lupset furnishes a commentary (ed. Cowper, p. 95).

1. 19. gentle. Ed. 1 reads 'gently.'
1. 20. handycraft men. First Edit., 'hand y craft men.'
1. 24. qweynes. Loose women. The word is from the A.S. cvene, another form of cvên, a woman, but from an early time having a bad sense attached to it. In M.E. the word was distinguished from its kindred word Queen by its open e, the one having the form queyne, the other queene. So in Piers Plowman (C) ix. 46:—

'Other a knyght fro a knave,
Other a queyne fro a queene.'

In Elizabethan English it is commonly spelt quean; so Shakespeare, 2 Henry IV, ii. 1. 51 'throw the quean in the Channel.'

1. 28. tables, i.e. backgammon. So Chaucer, Boke of the Duchess, 51 'Play either at Chesse or tables,' and Harington, Epig. i. 79 'Then with thy husband dost play false at tables.' The Latin word is fritillus, a dice-box.
Dr. Lupton observes that More once spoke less harshly of such amusements, as 'to cast a coyte, a cokstele and a ball,' was one of the child's accomplishments in his pageant.

1. 31. Caste out, &c. Such is the advice given in Dialogue, p. 175.

1. 33. towne is here used in the old sense of an 'enclosed place,' and so a farmstead with its land.
1. 37. ingrosse. Buy up wholesale or monopolize the trade in any commodity: cf. Cranmer, Catech. 77 'Fore-stalling, regratyng, ingrossing of marchaundise.'

forstalle. To buy up beforehand in order to sell at a higher price to those who come later.

P. 19, l. 2. let clothe workynge. Cf. Dialogue: 'If thys stapul were broken or otherwyse redressyd & clothying set up again in England . . . the commodye of our wolle & cloth schold bryng in all other thyngys that we haue need of:'

1. 9. auuance your selfes of=boast or pride yourselves on. Cf. Caxton, Golden Legend, 267 'He had no more wyll to advaunce him'; and Bishop Hall, Hard Texts, 477 'Thou advancest thyself to be as that glorious Cherub.'

1. 10. For this iustice, &c. The Latin is 'iusticiam nempe speciosam magis quam aut iustam aut utilem.' In his second edition Robynson turns it, 'is more beautiful in appearance and more florishyng to the shewe then either just. . . . His first version is too cramped, his second too diffuse. Burnet has, 'which tho' it may have the Appearance of Justice, yet in itself is neither just nor convenient.'

1. 15. they be commen. Ed. 2, 'being come.'

1. 37. Hold your peace. There is a marginal note in the Latin calling attention to Morton's habit of cutting loquacious people short: 'Expressit morem ei Cardinali familiarem, interpellandi si quis loquacius ageret.'

1. 38. by lyke (= later, 'belike'), 'probably,' 'in all likelihood': now obsolete. Cf. Udall, Aphor. 'Harpalus who by like had a good insight in suche matters.' Ed. 2 substitutes 'it appeareth that.'

P. 20, l. 6. earnest lette. Serious hindrance. The original has 'nisi quid impediat aut te aut Raphaelem hunc.'

1. 8. not worthy to be punished with death. Compare the similar discussion between Pole and Lupset in the Dialogue, where Pole takes the same view as Hythlodaye, and Lupset the view of the Lawyer.

1. 22. counteruayle = make up for, be an equivalent for, Latin contravalere, to be of the same value as; commonly used in the English of the 16th and 17th centuries.

1. 25. is recompensed = is repaid, finds retribution. 'Recompense' was frequently used in earlier English for good or evil, but has now lost the latter meaning.

1. 28. so streyte rules. This is Robynson's translation for 'tam Manliana imperia,' which is to be found in Livy iv. 29, and implies 'stringent decrees.' Cf. 'Draconian laws.' Lucius Manlius, surnamed from the imperious harshness of his character Imperiosus, was dictator B.C. 363. Both he and his son Titus M. C. Torquatus were noted for their sternness and severity.

1. 30. by and by. At once, immediately; so generally in 16th and 17th century English.

1. 31. stoycall. The later Stoics considered that all crimes were equal, 'omnia peccata esse paria'—an absurd paradox very pleasantly ridiculed by Cicero, Pro Murena, xix, and Horace, Sat. i. 3. 94 seqq.

1. 34. bothe a matter, i.e. both one matter, equally guilty. ãn is the A. S. form of 'one,' and in M. E. the n is sometimes dropped. N. E. D. quotes Hampole, Prose Tr. 32 'Some ere of a tree and some er of another.'

P. 21, l. 16. daunger = jurisdiction, or power—a sense illustrating the history of the word, which is derived from dominium through O. F. danger: so it comes to mean from power,' 'power to hurt or harm,' and so liability to come within that power.

1. 23. Moyses. The Greek form of Moses (Μωϋσης). The reference is to Exodus xxii. 1-9. Dr. Lupton appositely refers to Colet's Letters to ltaulphus, where he observes that Moses adapted his language to 'the uncultivated nature of those poor people, but lately occupied among the bricks and clay': 'Sed crassiter et pingue docenda fuit stulta illa et macra multitudo.'

1. 28. the newe lawe, i. e. the teaching of the Gospel.

P. 22, l. 6. care. Ed. 2 reads 'feare.'

1. 7. bewrayed, i. e. betrayed. From A.S. wrégan, to accuse, through M.E. bewruien. Cf. A.V. of Isaiah xvi. 3 'Bewray not him that wandereth,' and Shakespeare, Lear, ii. 1 'He did bewray his practice.'

1. 8. rydde, removed.

1. 9. vttered, put forth, made public. Cf. Elyot, Governour: 'Marchauntes do utter ... wares and commodoties'; now used chiefly in the sense of circulating coins, genuine or counterfeit.

1. 10. discriued = descried, detected. See Glossarial Index.

1. 12. single fellonye = mere theft.

1. 30. abowt the wordle. So often spelt in M.E. Skeat quotes Ayenbite of Inwy, p. 7, l. 10. Robynson repeatedly spells it so.

1. 32. the polylerytes. Like the Utopians, an imaginary people. Their name is derived from πολύς λήπος, 'much nonsense.'

1. 33. wyttelye = wisely, the common meaning in the English of the early sixteenth century and later.

P. 23, l. 8. to their chiefe lord and kinge. The first edition, misreading the original, which is 'rerum potenti' as 'potenti, translated 'the myghtye Kynge.'

1. 10. gallawnte = comfortable, rather than gay or showy. Gallant is from French geler 'to rejoice.'

1. 16. that they stoole. Ed. 2 has 'that which' for 'that.'

1. 21. paide of, i.e. paid out of.

1. 29. be not only tied, &c. The Latin has 'non tam vinculis cohercent quam excitant nerberibus,' 'they not so much imprison as flog them,' i.e. they more often resort to flogging than imprisonment. The English version is therefore misleading.

1. 35. indyfferent good = fairly or moderately good.
Cf. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. i. 122 'I am myself indifferent honest.'

P. 24, l. 1. that = that which, the reading of the second edition.

l. 4. In some places... maintained. The Latin has simply, 'alibi reditus quidam publici ad id destinantur'; 'landis' is interpolated by Robynson. The first edition reads 'fownde' for 'mainteined,' both meaning the same thing.

l. 9. for so be thies, &c. This is not in the Latin here, but comes afterwards with reference to 'seruynge men' in l. 29. It may have been an omission which Robynson inserted later in the wrong place; or possibly he thought it desirable to introduce this phrase earlier. Damned, condemned, in the Latin damnati.

l. 19. sum thynge, i.e. their earnings, which they were not allowed to keep.

P. 25, l. 1. openeth, i.e. discloses. Cf. A. V. Acts xvii. 2, 3 'Paul... reasoned with them... opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered.'

l. 5. of that they were of counsell in that pretence, i.e. for being of counsel = Latin conscientiae.

l. 22. to theyre guydes, i.e. for their guides.

l. 23. sheyre. This is a good example of Robynson's or his printer's fondness for varying the spelling of words. He has already spelt this 'sheire' and 'shyere,' and further on we have 'shere.'

l. 28. wyth the maner, i.e. red-handed. The word is derived from manus, hand, and opus, work, act; whence manuopere = 'in the very act.' 'Mainour' in Cowell's Law Dictionary (quoted by Nares) is thus explained: 'Mainour, alias manour, alias meinour from the French manier, i.e. "manu tractare," in a legal sense, denotes the thing that a thief taketh away or stealeth; as to be taken with the mainour is to be taken with the thing stolen about him.' Cf. Latimer: 'even as a thief is taken with the maner that he stealeth' (Sermons, ed. Parker Society, p. 110).

'The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner;' Henry IV, ii. 4. 437, and Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1. 205 'O villain... thou wert taken with the manner.'

l. 35. But. In the Latin 'At' (raising an objection) = 'But, some one will say.'

l. 36. dowted. To fear or be afraid, common in old English and not obsolete now. Cf. Holinshed, Chron. ii. 19
'The French king began to doubt of the puissance of King William,' and Shakespeare, passim.

P. 26, l. 8. of their counsell. Depending on 'make'; i. e. they would not confide in, or take into their confidence.

l. 11. opener = discloser, detector, cf. supra 25. i.

l. 17. For every yeare. As Dr. Lupton remarks, an anticipation of our 'ticket-of-leave' system, instituted by the Penal Servitude Act of 1853.

l. 27. made a wrie mouth. Lat. 'distorsit labrum,' twisted his lip, i. e. pouted. Cent. Dict. quotes Scott, Quentin Durward, 'Die like a man without making wry mouths.'

l. 31. withowte a proffe, i. e. without putting it to the proof: Lat. 'nullo facto periculo.'

l. 34. differryd = deferred. Both words come from Lat. deferre. But 'defer' in the sense of submit, or lay before, is from deferre.

l. 35. saintuaries. Originally every church or church-yard was a sanctuary for criminals. Some had special reputation, e. g. Westminster Abbey and Beverley Minster. The right of sanctuary in relation to common law was extended to any person accused of felony, who might thus preserve his life. There is ample testimony that this right was grossly abused. The Dialogue (p. 140) again illustrates More on this point, as well as the abuse of the privilege. 'And what think you by privylegys graunted to Churchys and al Sanctuarys? Can you judge them to be convenient? Thinke you that hyt ys wel a man when he hath commytted murder, or outragyouse robbery, deycyueved hys credytorys, to run to the sanctuary with al hys godys?... Who wil be aferd to kyl hys enemy, yf he may be sauyd by the pryuylege of sayntuary?' On the gross abuses of the rights of Sanctuary, More comments at length in his History of King Edward V, in the speech he puts into Buckingham's mouth, when he is urging the Council to take the Duke of York out of the sanctuary to which his mother had fled with him (ed. 1641, pp. 68-76).

P. 27, l. 14. sad = serious. From O.E. sæd, full; so sated, heavy, with other meanings naturally deduced. Cf. in sense of text, 'Sadde resoun,' Piers Plowman, B. xv. 541; 'A few sad words,' Beaumont and Fletcher, King and no King, ii. 1.

l. 17. parasite. From Greek παρά, 'beside,' and σίτος, 'food,' one who eats beside another at another's table; so a hanger-on or sycophant.

l. 18. which wold seme = who wished to simulate.
11. 25-6. indifferent and reasonable. Lat. ‘non absurda,’ not absurd; ‘indifferent’ practically qualifies ‘reasonable,’ and here means ‘neither very reasonable nor very unreasonable.’

1. 27. he that shoteth oft, &c.: in the Lat. ‘crebro iactu iaci aliquando Venerem.’ Erasmus gives the Lat. proverb in his Adagia, chil. i. cent. iii. prov. 13 ‘Si saepe iactaveris, aliquando Venerem iacies,’ i.e. ‘If you throw [the dice] often, you will at some time or other throw a Venus.’ The highest throw was called a Venus, and the lowest a Canis; so Propertius iv. 8. 45-6 ‘Me quoque per talos Venerem quaerente secundos, Semper damnosi subsiluere canes.’

1. 34. vnweldye, unwieldy. Used in an active sense; here practically synonymous with ‘impotent,’ ‘that cannot wield.’ Cf. Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose, 359 ‘Al woxen was hir body unwelde.’

1. 37. For I had rather then anye good = For I had rather than anything.

P. 28, l. 2. with their lamentable teares, &c. The Lat. is stronger: ‘cum querulis illis opplorationibus flagitarent pecuniam,’ ‘when with that pitiful weeping they kept imploring me for money.’

1. 9. leese=lose. Cf. Shakespeare, Sonnet v. 14 ‘But flowers distill’d . . . leese but their show’; it is very common in Elizabethan English.

1. 14. into houses of religion. Lat. has ‘in Benedictinorum coenobia,’ into the monasteries of the Benedictines. The Benedictines are an order of monks and nuns following the precepts of St. Benedict (c. 480–c. 543). Fifty Benedictines have already occupied the Papal throne. As they were by far the most numerous and most important of the Monastic Orders, their establishments are to some extent synonymous with ‘houses of religion.’

1. 15. laye bretherne, i.e. those who take the habits and vows of religion, but are employed mostly in manual labour, and are not admitted into even minor orders.

1. 33. towchyd one the quicke—touched on the quick. ‘Quick’ from A. S. cuic, alive; so ‘the quick’ means what is sensitively alive, as in the phrases ‘stung to the quick,’ &c.

hit on the gawl. This and the above phrase combined are Robynson’s equivalent for the Latin ‘tali perfusus aceto’ (an expression borrowed from Horace, Sat. i. 7. 32 ‘At Graecus, postquam est Italo perfusus aceto,’ &c.), meaning literally ‘deluged with such vinegar.’ ‘Gall’ here means a ‘blister,’ and is especially applied to the sore on a horse produced by rubbing. It is possible that the word is connected with ‘gall,’ in the sense of bile, gall-bladder; the notion of venom being transferred to ‘envenom’d spot.’

I. 34. fret = fretted. This word originally meant ‘to eat’ (A. S. fretan, German fressen); in 1835 it was used in an absolute sense ‘to champ the bit.’ Not to be confounded with fret-work, fretted ceilings, and the like, where the word is from fætwan, fætwian, to adorn or ornament.

P. 29, l. 4. Patient ioursel. Compose yourself. A not uncommon use of the word in earlier English. Cf. Shakespeare, Titus Andron. i. 2. 58 ‘Patient yourself, Madam, and pardon me.’

I. 8. gallous = gallows, i.e. the name adjectively used for one deserving of it, ‘a gallows bird.’ Cf. Shakespeare, L. L. L. v. 2. 12 ‘He hath beene five thousand yeeres a Boy. I, and a shrewd unhappy gallowes too.’

I. 10. be you angry. The reference is to Ps. iv. 4, where the A. V. reads, ‘Stand in awe, and sin not’; but More follows the Septuagint and the Vulgate, corroborated by St. Paul’s citation in Eph. iv. 26, as Dr. Lupton points out.

I. 14. the zeale of thy house. Ps. lxix. 9.

I. 16. The skorners of Helizeus, &c. The original lines are, as Dr. Lupton points out, from the De Resurrectione Domini of Adam of St. Victor: ‘Irrisores Helisaei, Dum conscendit domum Dei, Zelum calvi sentiunt.’ Helizeus = the Greek and Latin form of ‘Elisha.’ The ‘scorners’ of course refer to the children who mocked him for his baldness; see 2 Kings ii. 23. To indicate the Friar’s want of scholarship More makes him use zelus for zelum as if (see marginal note) it were a neuter noun like scelus.

I. 22. set your wit to a fooles witte. Lat. ‘Si te ita compares, ne cum homine stulto et ridiculo ridiculum tibi certamen instituas.’

I. 29. bald man. The monks and friars of course shaved the crown of their heads.

I. 33. excommunicate, suspended, and acursed. A periphrastic rendering of the original, which has simply excommunicati.
1. 35. preuy beck. A secret signal. Lat. has nutu. turned. The Latin has an adverb, commodum, meaning ‘opportune.’ Neither Robynson nor Burnet translates it.

1. 37. heare his sueters. Up to 1858 all probate matters were under ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and the fact of his being also Lord Chancellor of England would make the Cardinal’s legal duties particularly heavy.

P. 30, l. 5. hit. So frequently spelt till the middle of the sixteenth century.

parcell. In its original meaning of ‘portion’ or ‘part,’ still preserved in the phrase ‘part and parcel.’

1. 9. improved. This is from the Latin improbare = probare, ‘to approve of,’ with the negative prefix in-, so that the word means ‘to disapprove of.’ The N. E. D. quotes Bale, Eng. Votaries, 8 ‘They have improved that doctrine and taught the contrary.’

1. 10. incontinent = immediately; that is, hearing the Cardinal allow them, or let them pass, they immediately gave their approval to what was said. The Lat. original is euestigio.

1. 18. ensure = assure.

1. 24. of a child, i.e. as a child. Lat. has simply puer. For the reference see Introduction. Cf. Mark ix. 21.

1. 36. youre Plato. The passage referred to is in the Republic, bk. v. 473: ‘Until philosophers are kings, or the kings and princes of this world have the spirit and power of philosophy, and political greatness and wisdom meet in one, and those commoner natures who follow either to the exclusion of the other are compelled to stand aside, cities will never cease from ill.’ More, quoting probably from memory, gives only the general sense. By ‘youre Plato’ he seems to mean the Plato whom you have plainly so carefully studied, and whose philosophy has had so much influence on you, a well-known Latin usage.

P. 31, l. 4. wyll <not> vouchesaufe. Original omits ‘not,’ which Lupton supplies. Latin nec dignetur.

1. 16. Dionise. Dionysius the Younger succeeded his father as tyrant of Syracuse in 367 B.C. He was indolent and dissolute, and Dion, his father’s son-in-law, sought to improve him by inviting Plato to Sicily to instruct him in philosophy. He improved for a while; but a faction led by Philistus, the historian, succeeded in poisoning his mind against both Dion and Plato. Dion was accordingly banished, and Plato, not succeeding in obtaining his recall, left Syracuse. Thereupon Dionysius resumed his old life, and gave himself up to unrestrained debauchery. He was afterwards in turn driven out of Syracuse by Dion (who was later murdered), and several tyrants succeeded each other, until he at last retook the city in 346 B.C. After his return his conduct and mode of living were worse than ever, and two years later he was driven out by Timoleon, and spent the remainder of his life in Corinth (v. Plutarch, Dion).

1. 19. noughtenes. Much stronger than our use of it, and with the force of its derivation, A. S. naviht, nothing, worth nothing. Cf. 1 Sam. xvi. 28 'I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thy heart.'

1. 20. laughynge stocke. 'Stock' meant originally a 'stump,' 'stake,' 'post,' and came to mean an object especially stupid or dull, such a thing as would provoke scornful laughter; but 'laughing-stock' seems to mean a fixed object for laughing at; cf. the phrases 'laughing matter,' 'laughing thing,' and the like.

1. 22. Frenche kynge. Louis XII (1498-1515). On his accession he asserted his claims to the duchy of Milan, derived from his grandmother Valentina Visconti, and forthwith marched with an army into Italy and took possession in 1499. Encouraged by this he laid claim to Naples, derived from the Anjous, which had been unsuccessfully asserted by his predecessor, Charles VIII. Frederic, king of Naples, applied for assistance to Ferdinand, king of Spain, his relative, who thereupon sent him an army led by the celebrated Gonzalo of Cordova. Louis then secretly proposed to divide the kingdom of Naples with Ferdinand, who readily agreed; and they were joined in this infamous transaction by Pope Alexander VI. The unhappy Frederic, perceiving his hopeless condition, surrendered to Louis, who bestowed upon him the duchy of Anjou and a pension. Ferdinand and Louis, however, soon quarrelled over their respective shares; and after two battles the French were defeated and Naples was lost, 1503. A few years after Pope Julius II joined with Ferdinand, and after several campaigns Louis was finally driven out of Italy in 1513.

1. 29. fugatyue. Lat. fugitivam. So called because it was always slipping out of the grasp of the French.

1. 30. Venetians. At the treaty of Cambay (1508) Venice was divided between Louis XII, Ferdinand of Spain, Maximilian I of Austria, and Pope Julius II.
1. 32. Flaunders. From the death of Count Louis III in 1384, as he left an only daughter married to Philip of Burgundy, Flanders had practically formed part of this duchy. But in 1477 Mary of Burgundy married Maximilian of Austria, so that at this time Flanders was included in the Austrian Netherlands.

Brabant. Formerly a most important province of the Netherlands. On the death (1477) of Charles the Bold, the last independent duke of Burgundy, Brabant, which was part of their dominion, passed with Flanders to the Empire.

Burgundie. This duchy should also have passed with Brabant and Flanders to Mary of Burgundy; but her right to it was disputed by Louis XI, who affirmed that, as it had been given to Philippe le Hardi as an appanage, it reverted to the Crown in default of male heirs. It was therefore annexed to France, while its possessions passed to the House of Austria. See Bryce, Holy Roman Empire, Appendix.

P. 32, l. 5. Germaneynes. The ‘lance-knights’ served as mercenaries with the French. They were particularly conspicuous at the battle of Ravenna in 1512 when opposed to the Spaniards.

1. 6. Swychers. Later, ‘Switzers.’ The Swiss were notorious as mercenary infantry. (See Book II. ch. viii, with the Notes.)

1. 7. emperours maiestie. This refers to Maximilian of Austria. Though he is said to have taken pay when serving with the English at Tournay, and generally to have been mean and grasping, his country’s debt to him was in- calculable. He consolidated both the power of his House and that of the Empire. He reformed German law and created German discipline, and was the first to establish an organized standing army. He also secured the reversion of Hungary and Bohemia to his descendants, by a diplomatic marriage of his grandchildren.

1. 10. kynge of Arragone. Ferdinand, husband of Isabella of Castile, and father of Catharine of Arragon, first wife of Henry VIII.

1. 11. Nauarra. Navarre, a province on the borders of France and Spain. This kingdom shared the fate of the other little states over which France and Spain were disputing in the sixteenth century; and in 1512 the portion south of the Pyrenees passed to Ferdinand of Spain. The portion north of the Pyrenees was afterwards united to the crown of France by Henri IV. It is now known as the department of the Lower Pyrenees.

1. 13. wyth his .v. eggs. A proverb indicating some paltry, worthless proposition, or a statement officiously in-truded; the full phrase seems, as Ray gives it, to be ‘five eggs a penny, and four of them addle.’ N. E. D. quotes Udall, Apoph. 272 ‘Persones comying in with their five egges,’ &c. In Swift’s Journal to Stella, where the proverb frequently occurs, ‘two’ is substituted for ‘five.’ There is nothing to correspond to it in More’s Latin.

1. 14. Castell. The reference here seems to be to the recent negotiations for a marriage between Charles, Prince of Castile, and Madame Renée, the youngest daughter of Louis XII, and to the anxiety of Charles and his German ministers for an alliance with France. See Brewer, Reign of Henry VIII, vol. i. pp. 79 and 148-52.

1. 17. staye = stick, stop.

1. 23. skottes. The French were ever ready for an alliance with the Scots, to aid them against England.

1. 24. in aunters = usually, inaunter, enaunter, ‘in case that.’ French, aunter, aventure = English ‘adventure,’ thus ‘in adventure,’ ‘at adventure’ = in case that. Cf. ‘peradventure.’

1. 29. peere of Englannde. The definite reference, if any, cannot be explained. Dr. Lupton thinks it refers to Perkin Warbeck; and Gilpin (Utopia, vol. i. p. 105) suggests Richard de la Pole, fifth son of John de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk; but neither conjecture is quite satisfactory.

1. 34. affiaunce = O.F. affiance, trust or confidence. So Coverdale, Erasm. Paraphr. ‘puttyng his affyance in God.’

1. 38. turne ouer the leafe, and learne a newe lesson.
Robynson has adopted an entirely different metaphor from the Latin ‘uerti iubeam uela,’ should order the sails to be shifted, i.e. ‘to go on another tack,’ as Dr. Lupton points out.

P. 33, l. 8. Achoriens. Derived from ἄ, priv., and χώρα, place=those without a place of habitation, who dwell in a non-existent place. Cf. ‘Utopia.’ In classical Greek the adjective ἀχώρος would mean literally ‘homeless,’ as in Aelian.

1. 13. aliaunce, i.e. an alliance by marriage. Lat.
affinitas.

1. 26. peace nothynge better then warre. Lat. ‘pacem nihilis tutiorem.’

1. 32. set by. A synonym for ‘regarded’ or ‘esteemed.’ Cf. ‘His name was much set by,’ 1 Sam. xviii. 30.

P. 34, l. 3. mo = more. In M. E. ‘mo’ and ‘more’ were different words, ‘mo’ relating to number, and ‘more’ to size. Cf. Chancer, Prol. 578 ‘Mo then thries ten.’

1. 5. take hym for his mulettour. Another form of the proverb ‘qui aliena servat sua negligit.’ moyles = mules. Cf. ‘And at the sayd Noualassa we toke moyles to stey us vp the mountayne.’ Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 80.

1. 12. hys sake. Referring to the French king.

1. 13. hurley-burley = commotion, tumult, turmoil. Cf. Macb. i. 1. 3 ‘When the Hurley-burley’s done, When the Battaile’s lost and wonne.’ The phrase ‘hurling and burling’ preceded this. ‘Hurling’ itself means a ‘disturbance,’ and ‘burling’ is merely an initially varied repetition to intensify the meaning. Cf. ‘topsy-turvy.’

1. 21. endeuouere himself. Used reflexively. Cf. Caxton, Gold. Leg. 422, 423 ‘He . . . moche endeuoyred hym to make hym to lerne the deuyne Scripture’; and Elyott, Gov. Pref. 2 ‘I endeavoured myself while I had leisure . . . to translate.’

1. 26. turne hym to, i.e. turn his attention to.

1. 29. Suppose that some kyng. In the passage which follows More is glancing at abuses notorious in his time. Edward IV and Henry VII dealt with the coinage as More describes: Edward issuing, for the old coins, nobles and half-nobles worth respectively 6s. 8d. and 3s. 4d.; angels and angelots which, though considerably inferior in weight to the former coins, were ordered to pass as equivalent in value; and Henry VII securing great profit by calling in ministered or impaired coins and receiving them at the Mint by weight.

See Dr. Lupton’s Note.

P. 35, l. 1. to fayn warre. The particular reference seems to be to the subsidy levied in 1490, of a tenth and fifteenth for the maintenance of the army which was being raised for the defence of Brittany against France, and the subsidy of two entire tenths and fifteenths granted by the Parliament of January, 1492. The King came to peace with France at the treaty of Etaples, and appropriated the rest of the subsidy. See Stubbs, Lectures on Mediaeval and Modern History, ed. 3, 410 sq.

1. 10. certeyn olde and moughte-eaten lawes. This refers to the rapacious proceedings of Empson and Dudley under Henry VII, who put into force obsolete (moth-eaten) laws in order to exact a fine from those who were able to afford it and so increase the revenue. Lupton appositely quotes Hallam, Const. Hist. ch. i, who says that Statutes passed in previous reigns were 'raked out from oblivion,' and Henry, 'prosecuting such as could afford to endure the law's severity, filled his treasury with the dishonourable produce of amercements and forfeitures.' See Bacon's Henry VII; Kennett, i. 629.

1. 19. dispence for money with. This is a literal translation of the mediaeval Latin phrase dispensare cum, which More employs in the original. It means to arrange administratively with a person so as to grant him a relaxation or remission of a penalty incurred by breach of law, or special exemption or release from a law or obligation—N. E. D., which quotes Latimer, 2 Serm. before Edw. VI, 'God had dispensed wyth theym to have many wifes,' and Holland, Suet. 104 'He dispensed with a gentleman of Rome for his oath ... never to divorce his wife'; the condition being expressed in English by 'for'.

not be vsed = not to be used.

1. 25. preuyleges and licences, i.e. monopolies; an abuse which reached its height in the reign of James I.

1. 31. endauner= 'subject (the judges) to his absolute control,' which is the primary meaning of 'endanger.'

1. 35. And they muste be called, &c. The second edition reads 'yea, and further to call them into his palace, and to require them there to argue,' &c.

P. 36, 1. 3. pike a thanke = pick a thank or favour; one who picks a thank, i.e. filches a favour. Hence a 'pickthank' came to mean a 'toady'; cf. Shakespeare, Henry IV, iii. 2. 25 'By smiling pickthanks and base newsmongers.' So Wither, Britain's Remembrancer, 'By slavish fawning or by picking thanks' (Nares).

1. 5. take ... in a trippe. As we say, 'catch them tripping.'

1. 10. fyt occasion. Robynson has apparently, as Dr. Lupton notes, mistaken the adverb commodum. 'seasonably' or 'opportune,' for an adjective agreeing with ansam.
1. 16. equitie of. The second edition reads 'on.' But it is by no means uncommon to have 'of' for 'on' or 'for.' See Glossarial Index.

1. 17. wrythen and wrested = distorted and twisted. 'Wrythen' is the old past participle of 'writhe.'

1. 22. Crassus. Marcus Licinius Crassus, surnamed, from his ancestor Publius Licinius Crassus Dives, and celebrated for his enormous wealth. He was elected consul with Pompey in B.C. 70 and joined him and Caesar in forming the first triumvirate. While endeavouring to conquer the Parthians he was defeated and taken prisoner by Surenas, their general, who put him to death. Dr. Lupton observes that this passage looks like a reminiscence of Pliny, Hist. Nat. xxxiii. 10 'M. Crassus negabat locupletem esse, nisi qui reeditu annuo legionem tueri posset."

P. 37, l. 6. if I shuld declare. This doctrine, so daring in a subject of the Tudors, finds emphatic expression in one of More's Latin Poems to which he affixes as a title 'Populus consentiens regnum dat et auferit'—

Quicunque multis vir viris vnus praeest,
Hoc debet his quibus praeest:—
Praeesse debet neutiquam diutius
Hi quam volent quibus praecest.'

The same is maintained in Starkey's Dialogue between Pole and Lupset, ii. 1: 'After the decease of the prync, by electyon of the common voyce of the parlyamant assemblyd to chose one most apte to that hye offyce and dygnyte, wych schold not rule and govene al at hys owne plesure and lyberty but ever be subjecte to the ordur of hys lawys.' Monarchy on this principle and of this kind is one of the remedies proposed for the lamentable condition of the kingdom.

1. 9. wealthe, i.e. well. So also supra, 47. 5 'wealthely deuyseyd'; wealthe = well-being. See Glossarial Index.

1. 13. to feeade his shepe. Lupton compares Ezek. xxxiv. 2 'Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves: should not the shepherds feed the flocks?' and Plato, Repub. i. 343 'You fancy that the shepherd or neatherd fattens or tends the sheep or oxen with a view to their own good, and not to the good of himself or his master.'

1. 26. behated = thoroughly hated. The prefix 'be' here, as usual, intensifies the word. Cf. below.

1. 35. hardie and couragius. This is hardly a translation of the Latin 'vir erecti ac sublimis animi,' which Burnet more correctly translates 'A man of a noble and exalted Temper.'

l. 36. Fabrice. This is Caius Fabricius Luscinus who was elected consul in 282 B.C., and was renowned for his frugality and incorruptibility. After the defeat of the Romans by Pyrrhus king of Epirus, 281 B.C., Fabricius was sent to treat with that king, who tempted him with large bribes to enter his own service. Fabricius, though poor, refused. It is also said that Pyrrhus's own physician proposed to Fabricius to poison his master for a bribe; at which the consul indignantly put him in chains and sent him back to the king, who was greatly impressed by this example of Roman integrity. The saying attributed to him in the text is to be found in Valerius Maximus iv. 5; but is there related of M. Curius Dentatus who finally defeated Pyrrhus in 275 B.C.

P. 38, l. 6. be taking from them. 'Be' is an old form of 'by' still retained in compounds. Cf. supra, p. 26, and p. 55, 15.

l. 8. feate. Properly an action or deed (factum), then an art or trick. Cf. Chaucer, Clerks Tale, 429 'Griseldis—Coude all the feate of wisely homeliness.'

l. 9. let hym, &c. This could scarcely have been palatable advice to Henry VIII, to whom it plainly relates.

l. 11. runne in=incur, from Lat. incurrire, which, however, never means 'incur' in classical Latin.

l. 13. Let him do coste not aboue his power=let him adapt his expenditure to his income.

l. 18. callynge agayne lawes=reviving laws. The favourite device of the sharks under Henry VII.

l. 22. take suche fynes, &c. Cf. what Bacon says of Empson and Dudley, Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 190: 'Their manner was to cause divers subjects to be indicted of sundry crimes . . . to suffer them to languish long in prison and by sundry devices and terrors to extort from them great fines and ransoms which they termed compositions and mitigations.' Dibdin sees a pointed allusion to Henry VII's treatment of More's father.

l. 26. Macariens. The happy people. From the Greek, μακαρες, fortunate, blessed. It is not difficult to understand why this epithet is bestowed on them. Some, however, fancifully think that it refers to the Fortunatae Insulae or 'Islands of the Blessed.'

1. 30. golde or syluer. Dr. Lupton compares with this the fortune which Henry VII is said to have left at his decease, amounting to not less than £1,800,000, or in modern equivalent, certainly not less than eighteen millions. The Lat. says 'a thousand pounds of gold in weight, or silver of equivalent value.'

1. 35. The translation is here somewhat obscure. The Latin of this passage is, 'Nempe eum thesaurum videbat suffecturum, sive regi aduersus rebelleis, sive regno adversus hostium incursiones esset conflagendum; caeterum minorem esse quam ut animos faciat invadendi aliena.' 'He thought that sum sufficient should the King require it against rebels, or the country against invasion, yet insufficient to encourage the prince to invade the rights or possessions of others.' As Dr. Lupton remarks, 'invadendi aliena' may mean foreign wars.

P. 39, l. 3. able = enable, which is the reading of the second edition.

1. 10. prescript some = prescribed sum.
1. 13. of euell, of good = by . . . by.
1. 14. informatyons. Lat. 'haec . . . si ingererem.'
1. 25. cleane contrarye. Though 'clean' in this sense is now colloquial, it was commonly used in dignified composition in the sixteenth century.

1. 26. schole philosophie. Lat. scholastica.
1. 27. in the counsellles of kynges . . . phylosophye hadde no place among Kinges. Cf. Philip de Commines, Memoirs (English trans., bk. ii. ch. x), 'They are brought up to nothing but to make themselves ridiculous. They have no knowledge of letters; no wise man is suffered to come near them to improve their understandings.'

1. 35. cyuyle. The Lat. civilis = pertaining or adapted to citizens: civil in this sense is not yet obsolete.

P. 40, l. 3. Plautus. T. Maccius Plautus (or M. Accius Plautus as he is also, but incorrectly, called) was the most prolific and original of Roman comic dramatists; twenty of his plays are extant. Born about 250 B.C., he died 184 B.C.

1. 4. vyle bondemen, i.e. the slaves who were impersonated in the comedy.

1. 8. Seneca. Lucius Annaeus Seneca, the philosopher, born about 4 B.C.; he was a very versatile author. The tragedies which he wrote, among which Octavia which he certainly did not write is included, are imitations of Greek Alexandrian models and distinguished rather for rhetorical than dramatic power. He was accused of taking part in the Pisonian conspiracy against Nero, and condemned. He elected to open his veins, and so perished, 65 A.D.

1. 8. dysputeth with Nero. This occurs in the second act of Octavia, and forms a very animated dialogue.

1. 9. domme persone. The muta persona, or, in Greek, the κωφόν πρόσωπον; the character who plays a 'thinking' part and says nothing.

1. 12. gallymalfreye (or 'gallimaufry' as it is more commonly spelt), was originally a 'dish made up of odds and ends of food,' a 'hodge-podge'; then used for any confused jumble or mixture. Here it means 'a ridiculous medley.' This is probably the earliest use of the word in English; from fourteenth-century Fr. galimafrée.

1. 37. wyttelye, i.e. wisely; handsomely = 'handily,' 'in a suitable manner.'

P. 41, l. 9. as for to speake = as for speaking.

1. 19. as much. First edition 'a smuch.'

1. 20. seuerall, separate. Cf. Milton, Hist. Eng. ii fin. 'So different a state of things requires a several relation.' Cf. the modern phrase 'they went their several ways.'

1. 26. hedlonges, adverbial genitive in -s. 'The word was originally 'headling,' but altered by erroneous assimilation to 'long.' '-ling' is an old suffix for forming adverbs from nouns.

1. 32. wyncke at, 'shut our eyes to.' Cf. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 4. 52 'Let not night see my black and deep desires; The eye wink at the hand!'

1. 36. in open howses. The expression is not clear in the English. The original is 'palam in tectis,' openly on the house tops. See Luke xii. 3.

1. 37. dissident from, at variance with.

P. 42, l. 3. euel willing, evil or ill willing, and so 'unwilling.'

1. 4. wrested, twisted. 'Wrest once the law to your authority: To do a great right do a little wrong,' Shakespeare, M. of V. iv. 1. 215. wriede, turned or twisted, and so 'perverted.' The verb 'wry' meant to turn or twist: the verb is now almost obsolete in all forms, but the phrase 'awry' still remains, as well as the adjective 'wry.'
1. 5. a rule of leade (Greek μολίβδως καρών, plumbea regula in More's Latin) was used in ancient Greece in 'Lesbian building'—probably because, being flexible, it could be adapted to curved 'Lesbian' mouldings: it is mentioned for its adaptability by Aristotle, Ethics, V. 10. 7, whence More drew the metaphor. (For other examples in English literature, see N. E. D. s.v. Lesbian, and see in loc. Stewart's Notes.)

1. 6. at the leaste waye, at least.

1. 9. sickerlye, securely, surely. M.E. sikerly, in its turn derived from the Lat. securus.

1. 10. asmuche. The second edition reads 'as little.'

1. 13. Mitio saieth in Terence. Adelphi, i. 2. 66 'Verum si angeam Aut etiam adiutor sim eius iracundiae, Insaniam profecto cum illo.'

Terence. P. Terentius Afer is the only Roman comic dramatic poet, with the exception of Plautus, whose works have come down to us. He died 159 B.C.

1. 15. traine. That which draws or lures on, so an artifice. Now obsolete in this sense, but common in earlier English. Cf. Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 24 'Subtil Archimag that Una sought By traynes into new troubles to have toste,' and Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4. 118 'By many of these traines hath sought to win me.'

1. 20. there. The emphasis is on this word, as it renders ibi in the original.

1. 27. occasyon. This is the meaning of the Latin word occasio, opportunity.

1. 33. layde in hyz necke, i.e. laid to his charge: cf. infra 114, l. 26, 'and them they sette in theyre neckes.' The metaphor appears applicable to a yoke rather than to setting on dogs to the neck of a hunted animal. Compare Cicero, Ad Fam. xii. 23 'Cogitabat legiones ad urbem adducere et in cervicibus nostris colloicare,' and many similar instances in Lewis and Short's Latin Dictionary.

1. 36. Plato. From Repub. vi. 495: 'And he [the wise man] reflects upon all this and holds his peace and does his own business. He is like one who retires under the shelter of a wall in the storm of dust and sleet which the driving wind hurries along; and when he sees the rest of mankind full of wickedness, he is content if he only can live his own life and be pure from evil or unrighteousness, and depart in peace and goodwill with bright hopes.'

P. 43, l. 10. as my mynde geueth me, as my feelings incline or move me. The verb is still retained in 'my mind misgives me.'

l. 11. beareth all the stroke, i. e. has the chief influence. 'He has a great stroke with the reader when he condemns any of my poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them' (Dryden).

l. 25. had in pryce. The Latin is 'ut et virtuti precium sit, et tamen aequatis rebus omnia abundant omnibus'; which seems to mean 'that, while worth receives its proper wage, nobody shall lack.'

l. 26. common. On this, the basis of the Utopian Commonwealth, see Introduction.

l. 38. holde well with Plato, agree with Plato. This anecdote is related by Diogenes Laertius in his Life of Plato (De Vitis Clar. Phil. iii. 17); translated, it runs thus: 'Pamphila says in the twenty-fifth book of her Commentarii that the Arcadians and Thebans, after building a great city, asked him [Plato] to be its legislator; but that, on learning that they would not consent to an equality of rights, he declined to go thither.' Aelian (Var. Hist. ii. 42) tells the same story at greater length.

P. 44, l. 12. all the riches that there is. Ed. 2 reads 'all the whole riches.' Robynson here seems to regard the word as sing., no doubt correctly (= M. E. richesse); but it also occurs as plur. from the Ayenbite onwards (see Skeat's Etymological Dictionary).

l. 25. propriety, ownership; right of possession. The Lat. proprietas.

l. 32. a certein measure of ground. In the draft of a Bill of 1548 by Hales preserved in the Record Office, which in its preamble sums up the distresses and miseries caused by the wrongs and grievances here indicated, the limitation suggested by More was proposed. See transcript in Appendix to Introduction to A discourse of the Common Weale of England, edited by Miss Lamond, pp. 47, 48.

l. 37. offices shold not be obtained. The all but universal corruption which More here exposes is the theme of almost all who illustrate the social history of the time. See the ballad of Now a dayes, and others in Furnivall's Ballads from Manuscripts, the Dialogue between Pole and Lupset, and the Sermons of Latimer and Lever. 'The saying is now,' says Latimer, 'that money is heard everywhere: if he be rich he shall soon have an end of his matter.'
Everything was for sale—employments, offices, justice. In his own rigid incorruptibility More stood alone.

suyte, suit, solicitation.

P. 45, l. 4. gather vp their money again, recoup themselves.

l. 9. kept vp. Ed. 2 reads ‘kept and botched vp for a time.’

l. 17. taken from an other. Cf. Publilius Syrus (Sent. ed. Nisard, p. 785), ‘Lucrum sine damno alterius fieri non potest’: and Bacon’s ‘Whatsoever is somewhere gotten is somewhere lost’ (Of Seditions and Troubles). Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 39, furnishes a picturesque illustration; and the proverb, ‘Serpens nisi serpem comederit non fit draco,’ a fancifully practical one.

l. 32. what place it maye haue, i. e. how it can have a place.

l. 38. presently = personally (Lat. praesens).

P. 46, l. 33. impery. A form of the word directly from the Latin imperium. The commoner form in early English is ‘empery,’ from the old French ‘emperie.’

l. 36. So great proffyte . . . from hence. This is a little obscure, through being so literal; the original is ‘tanto bono fuit illis aliquos hinc semel illuc esse delatos.’ Burnet turns it ‘so happily did they improve that accident of having some of our people cast upon their shore.’

P. 47, ll. 16, 17. This is an interesting illustration of the purely capricious spelling common with Robynson, his predecessors and contemporaries, and printers. ‘Their’ is spelt in the course of two lines in no less than four different ways.

l. 25. ‘Content . . . be it.’ Original has fiat, ‘let it be done.’

BOOK II

CHAPTER I

P. 48. In the title, for ‘Godly’ gouernement, Ed. 2 reads ‘politike.’

‘Topography and general description of Utopia; its havens, defences and cities; its capital and the connexion of the capital with the cities and country districts; rural life and its organization; its agricultural system, transference of produce to the cities, and relation of the cities to the rural districts.'
The general description of Utopia is plainly modelled on Plato's picture of Atlantis in the Critias, pp. 112-20 (see Jowett's translation). It bears also some resemblance, as Mr. Cannan has pointed out to me, to Tacitus's account of Britain. Agricola, cap. x 'Formam . . . eloquentissimi auctores oblongae scutulae vel bipenni assimilavere. . . . Immensum et enorme spatium procurrentium extremo iam littore terrarum velut in cuneum tenuatur.' In More's Latin this becomes 'fines versus paulatim utrimque tenuatur'; . . . while the ends 'insulam totam in lunae speciem renascentis effigiant.' There can be little doubt that the contrast presented by such towns as Bruges and Antwerp to London must have greatly contributed to draw More's attention to the deficiencies in English social life and its surroundings. The same contrast was noticed some years later by Starkey. 'Methought, when I came fyrst into Flaunders and Fraunce, that I was translatyd as hyt had byn in a nother world, the cytes and townes apperyd so gudly, so wel bylded and so clene kept: of the wych ther ys in every place so grete cure and regard that every towne semyd to me tostryue wyth an other, as hyt had byn for victory, which schold be more beautiful and strong, bettur byld and clennur kept' (Dialogue, ed. Cowper, pp. 92, 93).

1. 16. Whiche. Referring to 'endes.'

fetchyng about a circuite or compasse, i.e. forming a circle, making a circular course. N. E. D. quotes Coverdale, Eccles. i. 6 'The wynde goeth toward ye South & fetcheth his compase about unto the North'; and Gilpin, Demonol. 56 'He falls not directly upon what he intended, but fetcheth a compass.'

.v.c. = 500.

1. 18. Betwene thys two corners, &c. The island would be roughly horse-shoe shaped, the two extremities being only eleven miles apart in a bee line, whilst the sea, enclosed like a harbour, would be of a circular shape and 160 miles across, the whole island being 360 miles in diameter. The general description of the haven recalls what may possibly have suggested it, Virgil, Aen. i. 159-64:

'Est in secessu longo locus: insula portum
Efficit obiectu laterum, quibus omnis ab alto
Frangitur inque sinus scindit sese unda reductos.
Hinc atque hinc vastae rupes geminique minantur
In caelum scopuli, quorum sub vertice late Aequora tuta silent.'
l. 20. surmounteth, mounts over the two corners, that is, the fons Anydri and the ostium Anydri (as marked in the woodcut opposite the title-page of the original edition), and forms a bay.

l. 25. nor mountith not. This is like the Greek double negatives, not making, of course, an affirmative but intensifying one other; it is common in Elizabethan English. Cf. ‘This England never did (nor never shall), Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror.’ Shakespeare, K. John, v. 7.

P. 49, l. 1. fordys. A ford is properly a shallow place which may be crossed by wading. Here it means ‘shallow tracts of water.’ shoals, sand-banks.

l. 5. because it is in sight. There is nothing to correspond to this in the Latin.

l. 15. translatynge = transferring. translatus is used as p.p. of transferre, but -latus is from a different root, ital. ‘to bear,’ or ‘carry across,’ whence Lat. tollere. For Robynson’s now obsolete use of it cf. A.V. Heb. x. 15 ‘By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death.’

l. 18. The out side. Ed. 2 adds ‘or vterror circuitez of.’

l. 19. suerly = securely. what by . . . what by. Like ‘what with . . . what with,’ supra l. 1; the two ‘whats’ meaning ‘partly, partly,’ or ‘both, and’; aut, aut in the original.

l. 26. Abraxa. Dr. Lupton suggests that this name may be derived from or connected with the Greek αβρακτας, ‘unwetted’ or ‘wanting rain’—a city on which no rain fell,—and he compares ‘Anyder,’ though the derivation there has certainly more point. But there can be little doubt that what suggested the word to More was what suggested to him the letters of the Utopian alphabet, namely the symbols or gems of the Gnostics. See the plates in King’s Gnostics and their Remains. More says in the ninth chapter that the Utopians worshipped Mithras. Now, by the Gnostics, Abraxas was frequently associated with Mithras in the gems. Abraxas is a mystic name said to mean either in actual Coptic ‘Holy Name,’ or, as seems equally probable, merely the Hebrew ‘Ha-B’rachah,’ i.e. ‘The Blessing.’ The symbolic figure embodying the idea of the Abraxas god has a reference to the sun in all its components. See King’s Gnostics, pp. 117 seqq. and pp. 251-9. ‘Abraxas,’ there can be little doubt, suggested this name to More.
1. 28. humanitie = civilization, ‘culture’ exactly, the Lat. humanitas. N. E. D. quotes Wyclif, 2 Macc. iv. 11 ‘Because of humanee or curtasie.’

1. 32. vplandyshe, i.e. up country, = right inland, or possibly in the sense used supra, 15. 10.

1. 35. because = that, in order that. Cf. Matt. xx. 31 ‘And the multitude rebuked them because they should hold their peace.’

1. 38. into = among. A rare use of the word.

P. 50, 1. 6. .liiiii. Dr. Lupton thinks that More had England in his mind. Harrison (Description of England, ed. Furnivall, pp. 96-7) gives the number of English counties as fifty-three, and More may have reckoned the City as a county in itself, and so made up his number.

1. 7. agreyng all together. So Tacitus on the Germans. Germ. ch. ii.

1. 10. as farfurth as. The difference between ‘farfurth’ and ‘far’ is not easy to grasp.

1. 14. Amaurote. The ‘dark,’ ‘dim,’ ‘obscure’ city, Gk. ἀμαυρός, a fitting name for the capital of Utopia. It is applied in the Odyssey (iv. 824) to a spectre or vision which Athene sends to Penelope—εἰςδωλον ἀμαυρόν.

1. 15. entreate = treat. Cf. ‘Richarde, the third sonne, of whom we now entreate.’ More’s Rich. III, xxxvii. 1.

1. 17. in the myddes. In the midst. The Lat. has in umbilico, ‘in the navel.’

1. 28. husbandes, i.e. husbandmen. Cf. Fabyan, Chron. vii. 421 ‘In this yere . . . fell so excedynge rayne that husbondys myght not bring in their store of corne’; and Dryden, ‘When Husbands have survey’d the last Degree, . . . and order’d ev’ry Tree’ (Virg. Georg. ii. 578).

1. 32. of the cytezens, by the citizens, common use of ‘of.’ N. E. D. quotes Gower, C. A. iii. 1332 (Macaulay), ‘The Cite . . . Of worthi folk . . . was enhabited here and there.’

1. 33. by course, i.e. in turn, alternately. Cf. Sidney, Arcadia, i. 5 ‘They took their journey . . . Claius and Strephon by course carrying his chest for him.’ Tacitus notes that the same custom prevailed among the Germans: ‘Agri pro numero cultorum ab universis in vicis occupantur’ (German. xxvi). Vices has been corrected to vicis in modern editions; see Stubbs, Const. Hist. i. p. 19, n. 3.

1. 35. bonden men. Men who have transgressed the law and are made slaves. They are attached to the soil, and pass transferred accordingly to its successive owners.

ll. 36, 37. good man, good wyfe. Still used commonly for the master and mistress of a house.

P. 51, l. 1. Phylarche. Strictly 'chief of a tribe or clan' from the Greek φυλαρχος, φυλή, clan, and ἀρχος, chief. Robynson is more accurate than the original, which misprints it 'philarchus,' the reading at the end of this chapter being correct—'phylarchi.' Cf. Macaulay on Croker’s Boswell (Essays, ed. 1861, p. 161).

l. 2. baylyffe. After 1531 applied to a landlord’s agent: here he is acting for the State. O.F. and M.E. baillif, from the late Latin bailiulivus, properly meaning one charged with public administrative employment in a certain district.

l. 15. occupiers, i.e. 'those occupied in.'

l. 16. solempne = customary. Lat. sollemnis, literally 'annual,' applied to religious rites which occurred annually; hence solemn = serious. For the sense in which it is here employed cf. Milton, Par. Lost, iv. 646-7 'silent night with this her solemn bird.'

l. 22. bryde vp = breed or bring up: a variant not noticed by the N. E. D.

l. 25. pulleyne, i.e. poultry. Low Lat. pulla, a hen. policie, i.e. contrivance. The Lat. has artificium. For the account in the text Dr. Lupton quotes Bacon, Nat. Hist., cent. ix. 856, and Pliny, Hist. Nat. x. 54, and refers to a curious passage in the pseudo-Maundeville’s Travels (ed. 1883, p. 49). The whole subject is discussed and amply illustrated by J. A. St. John in his Egypt and Mohamed Ali, vol. ii. p. 327.

l. 31. nor non. Another instance of a double negative emphasizing the negation.

very fearce ones. The idea of horses being employed for this purpose may have been suggested, as Dr. Lupton thinks, by Plato, Repub. v. 467 'We must mount them on horses in their earliest youth, and when they have learnt to ride take them on horse-back to see war: the horses must not be spirited and war-like, but the most tractable and yet the swiftest that can be had.' Cf. too Xenophon, Cyropaedia, iv. 3.

l. 36. at a sodeyne brunt ... dead lifte. Ed. 1 reads 'as' for 'at a.' According to the N.E.D. the primary meaning of 'brunt' is 'a sharp blow.' The derivation is doubtful; it is probably an onomatopoeic word. 'At a brunt,' means 'at one blow,' 'at once,' tout à coup. Here it means 'spurt'; and a dead lifte = lifting a dead weight, being still used dialectally for the pull of a horse exerting his utmost strength at a dead weight beyond his power to move. The original is 'boves... equis impetu cedere.'

1. 37. they = oxen, which is the reading of the second edition.

P. 52, l. 2. so manye dysseases. The manye infirmities to which horses are subject became proverbial. So Shakespeare, 'He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health,' &c. (K. Lear, iii. 6. 18).

1. 7. other wyne, i.e. either, a common M.E. variant. N. E. D. quotes Wyclif, 'ether to kyng, other to deukes,' cf. 'nother' for 'neither.' See Glossarial Index.

1. 8. methe = mead. A.S. medu. A drink made from honey and water.

1. 9. liqueressse. 'Liquorice' is derived from Lat. glicyrhiza, Gk. γλυκός = sweet + ἱκέα = root.

sodde, i.e. sodden, boiled. Cf. 'Can sodden water, ... their barley broth, Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?' Shakespeare, Hen. V, iii. 5. 18.

1. 13. spende. Consume or dispose of. Whitney quotes Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 276 'a little bread which they spent by Thursday at night.'

1. 22. Philarches. This mode of spelling the word makes the derivation from Gk. φιλαρχι, fond of rule. But in the Latin it is here phylarchi, 'clan-chiefs,' as at p. 51, l. 1, philarchi thus affording another instance of Robynson's fondness for variety in spelling.

CHAPTER II

OF THE CYTIES AND NAMELY OF AMAUROTE.

The cities are modelled on the Capital; particular description of the Capital: the river Anyder and its bridge: the water supply, defences of the city, its streets, houses and gardens described in detail.

This description of Amaurote was drawn from London, and its reference to London is marked in the marginal notes of the Latin text; in some of its features it recalls London as it was, in others London as it ought to be, the satire being implied in the touches of description. Stow, in his Survey of London and Westminster, vol. ii. pp. 573-4, after observing that More's description of Amaurote 'doth in every particular thing so exactly square and correspond with our City of London that I make little doubt that writer did thereby mean the same place,' transcribes More's account of it as a picture of London in Henry VIII's time. In its excellent sanitary arrangements Amaurote certainly did not square with London. See the General Introduction, and compare particularly the letter of Erasmus to Francis, Wolsey's physician, cited and translated by Brewer, Letters and Papers of Henry VIII, pref. ccix: 'Englishmen never consider the aspect of their doors or windows; next, their chambers are built in such a way as to admit of no ventilation. Then a great part of the house is occupied with glass casements which admit light but exclude the air, and yet they let in the draught through holes and corners, which is often pestilential and stagnates there. The floors are in general laid with white clay and are covered with rushes occasionally removed, but so imperfectly that the bottom layer is left undisturbed, sometimes for twenty years, harbouring expectoration, ale-droppings, scraps of fish, and other abominations not fit to be mentioned.' And to these unhealthy and noisome conditions he is inclined to attribute the epidemics which so often visited London.

P. 53, l. 2 (title). namely = in particular, especially.

l. 7. skylleth not = it does not matter. Cf. 'It skills not whether I be kind to any man living.'—Shirley, Gamester, O. Pl. ix. 36.

l. 17. Anyder. A fitting name for the river of No-Peace-Land, from the Greek ἀνεσίδ, waterless—a river which is no river. Its general description recalls, as was intended, the Thames. See Stow, Survey, ii. 458.

l. 25. lx. The Latin has sexaginta. Ed. 2 has 'fortie.' London is 40 miles in a bee-line to the sea, and about 60 miles following the course of the river, London Bridge to the Nore.

l. 26. By al that space, i.e. throughout the whole of this area. The Lat. has 'Hoc toto spacio.' The marginal note in the Latin directs attention to the same thing occurring in the Thames: 'Idem fit apud Anglos in flumine Thamysi.'

l. 27. a good sorte = colloquial 'lot,' a good many miles. Ed. 2 reads 'certen.'
P. 54, l. 1. chaungethe. Lat. has corrupit. So 'chaungethe' is used in the sense of 'taints'; cf. the dialectal or colloquial use, 'the milk is changed' (by thunder, &c.).

ll. 3, 11. forby, for-by, past. Cf. German vorbei.

l. 7. a brydge. London Bridge is intended.

l. 8. stonewarke. Many bridges were erected on piles in More's time; London Bridge was of stone.

l. 12. lette = hinderance. A reference to the drawbridge at the fourteenth arch of London Bridge, which was raised to allow the larger ships to pass through.

an other ryuere. 'This,' says Stow, 'must be the river of the Wells that ran down by Walbrook,' probably not the Flete river.

l. 23. deryued, i.e. diverted, turned aside. Lat. dirivatur.

l. 24. cannellis, i.e. channels or canals. The reference is to the Conduits: the Conduit in Cheapside, erected in 1289; the Tonne in Cornhill (1401); the Bosses of Water at Paul's Wharf and Cripplegate (1423); the Little Conduit in Fleet Street and Aldermanbury (1471), and others (Stow).

dyuers ways: and so distributed in all directions.

l. 30. full of turrettes, i.e. with a long array of turretts. The Lat. has turribus frequens. This is a reminiscence of the Wall of London and the moat or ditch round it; and More, in speaking of the 'drye dyche' of Amaurote, is contrasting it with the filthy city ditch of London, one of the most noisome and disgusting features of the London of his time. References to this horror are frequent in the writers of those times.

l. 35. appoynted, i.e. laid out. Here the satire on London comes in. For a description of the streets of London see Introduction.

l. 36. carriage, i.e. transport. The Lat. has vectura.

P. 55, l. 2. twenty fote brode. The streets of London were as a rule about ten or twelve feet broad. See Brewer, Henry VIII, vol. i. p. 204. In this part of the description More was no doubt drawing on his experience of Bruges, which he could not fail to contrast with London. (See Dr. Lupton's Introduction, p. xxx.)

l. 8. with two leaues, i.e. they were folding doors. The original has bifores.

l. 11. Eueyre man that wyll. In the marginal note of the Latin it is pointed out how this savours of Plato, 'Haec sapiunt communitatem Platonis.' The reference is to the conclusion of the third book of the Republic. 'None of them (the citizens) should have any property beyond what is absolutely necessary, neither should they have a private house with bars and bolts closed against any one who has a mind to enter' (Jowett's Trans.).

1. 15. They sett great stcore be, &c. In his account of the gardens, More recalls the pleasantest features of the London of his time. It is represented by Fitz Stephen, writing as early as about 1170, as 'a city of gardens.' 'Unlike extra domos suburbanorum Horti civium arboribus consiti, spatiosi, et speciosi, contigui habentur' (Descripito nobilissima Civilatis Londonicce, printed in Appendix to Stow's Survey, ed. 1603). See too the verses by Sir Thomas Chaloner, describing the gardens of London in Elizabeth's reign, quoted by Stow, Survey, vol. ii. p. 459:—

'An quod amoena tibi facies hinc, inde viretis
Clauditur? Arboribusque frequens, quod villa sub ipsis Moenibus erigitur patulis umbrosior hortis.'

1. 16. vyneyardes. In More's time London was not without its vineyards, as is still indicated by the name Vine Street, Saffron Hill, which marks the site of the great vineyard of Ely Palace. Dr. Lupton says there was another at Westminster, near St. John's Church, and that even as late as towards the end of the eighteenth century there was one on the site of what is now Addison Road Station.

1. 18. thynge = anything.

1. 31. platte fourme, French plateforme, Italian piatta forma, the ground plan.

1. 38. M.viic.lx., i.e. one thousand seven hundred and sixty.

P. 56, l. 2. verye lowe. This is a reference to the 'mean hovels, mud walls, thatched roofs struggling with overhanging gables and shutting out both air and light' (Brewer, Henry VIII, vol. i. p. 294), which in More's time and long afterwards disgraced London.

1. 4. at all adventures. The Lat. has temere, at random, hap-hazard, anyhow. This is the primary meaning of the phrase. Hence it came to mean 'at all hazards,' 'at any risk,' and then 'at all events,' 'at any rate.' Cf. Smeaton, Edystone Lighthouse, p. 275 'At all adventures they were to fit the outside shell of the building.'

1. 8. storries. From the O.F. estorée, a building, pp.
of estorer, late Latin staurare, Latin instaurare, to erect, build.

1. 9. Flynte. This word has no connexion with the Welsh county of that name; but is possibly cognate with the Gr. πλιθος, a brick.

1. 14. peryshe. Used actively, 'destroy,' 'kill.' Cf. 'You are an innocent. A soul as white as Heaven: let not my sins Perish your noble youth,' Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy, iv. 1. Cf. also our colloquialism, 'You look perished with cold.'

1. 17. glasse. In the houses of the richer classes glass was coming into use in the reign of Henry VIII (see Erasmus to Francis, Brewer, Letters and Papers, vol. ii. pt. 1, p. ccix), but in ordinary houses it was not common till the reign of James I. As late as 1567 it was such a rarity that special precautions were used to protect it. See Eden's State of the Poor, vol. i. p. 77. As it was commonly used for windows in the great towns of the Low Countries, More was no doubt pressing its use in England.

1. 18. sumwhere, i.e. in some places; the Lat. is interim, which, used in the sense of interdum, means here 'sometimes,' a rare use of the word which may have puzzled Robynson.

1. 19. cyle or ambre, Lat. succinum, amber in its resinous state; or probably spirit of amber, succinic acid. When heat was applied to amber it was resolved into a sticky substance like resin or pitch. Cf. Tacitus, Germ. xlv 'si naturam succini admoto igni tentes,...mox ut in picem resinamve lentescit'; and of this More may have been thinking.

CHAPTER III

OF THE MAGYSTRATES.

The Syphogranti and Tranibori and their functions: method of electing Princes of the cities: the Tranibori and other officers: duration of their time of office: mode of conducting consultations. With the functions of the Syphograuntes and Tranibores may be compared Tacitus's account of the German principes and comites, Germ. xi, xii.
P. 57, l. 3. fermes, i. e. farms.

1. 6. Syphoagrauntes. The Lat. is Syphogranti. Whether any derivation can be traced for this word is as yet an unsolved problem. Dr. Lupton half humorously but most ingeniously suggests that the only Greek word to which it bears a resemblance, συφεός, 'a sty,' may throw light on its origin, and that More was thinking of the Benchers and Steward (Sty-ward) of his old Inn. Certainly the title Tranibori, which is associated with it, savours at least of Greek, θαυμησόροι, 'bench-eaters,' and so points in this direction. It is just possible that More may, fancifully and erroneously coining, have written the word Syphogronti, the printer changing the 'o' into 'a,' and that the third syllable of the word may be traced to γεροντες, so that it would mean 'seniors of the sty,' i. e. συφεόν γέροντες. But all this is very unsatisfactory.

1. 7. 300. The second edition corrects 'thirtie'; which of course comes to the same thing, meaning 'each with their thirty families.'

1. 12. secrete electyon. An election held privately. The 'prince' elected is of course the chief magistrate of each city only, not of the whole island.

1. 15. put vp. Lat. unus commendatur senatui.

1. 20. lightlye. For a slight or trivial reason.

1. 26. by and by. Latin has mature, speedily, quickly.

1. 32. It is deathe, i. e. it is considered a capital crime. The Lat. is capitale habetur.

P. 58, l. 6. Therfore matters of greate weyghte. With this passage cf. Tacitus, Germ. xi 'De minoribus rebus principes consultant, de maioribus omnes, ita tamen ut ea quoque, quorum penes plebem arbitrium est, apud principes praetactentur.'

1. 16. Bycause that. In order that. Cf. supra 49, 35. Lat. has ne quis.

1. 17. that = what, that which. Cf. P. B., 'to do always that is righteous in thy sight.'

1. 18. fyrste to hys tonges ende. 'Fyrste' is omitted in the second edition.

1. 19. defende and confyrme, i. e. strengthen. The second edition has 'defende and mainteine.' The Lat. has tueatur.

1. 24. existymatyon. Estimation, esteem, reputation. His worth in the opinion of himself and of others. Cf. Moral...
State Eng., Pref.: 'He who striveth to wound his Brother's Existimation, at the same time stabbeth his own.'

wolde not for shame . . . be cowntede annye thynge overseen in the matter at the fyrste. The second edition reads 'wolde be ashamed . . . to be at the firste overseene in the matter,' i.e. be ashamed to appear to have been lacking in foresight at the beginning. The Lat. has 'ne initio parum prosplexisse videatur.' overseen = deceived, deluded. The verb 'oversee,' as well as its past participle in this sense, is now obsolete except in literary use. Cf. Fuller: 'The most expert gamester may sometimes oversee,' i.e. see wrongly, go astray. So Middleton, Chaste Maid, iv 'They're mightily overseen in it methinks.'

CHAPTER IV

Of Scyences

Craftes and Occupatyons.

Importance attached to husbandry: other trades and occupations of the Utopians: regulations of labour; of their recreations; no idlers and fribbles—the pest of other communities—allowed to exist: employments of those who are too old or otherwise unfit for manual labour. Why there is less need for incessant work, such as house-building and clothes-making, and more leisure for mental cultivation, than in other states.

This chapter is full of satirical strokes at the customs and condition of things in England, tacitly satirizing them by depicting, in contrast, the Utopian treatment of artisans and labourers.

P. 59, l. 8. brought vp. Robynson, as Dr. Lupton points out, has confused the Lat. educi for educati. It should be 'taken out,' i.e. into the fields outside the city.

1. 13. seuerall. Separate, distinct.
1. 14. clothe-workinge. For the point of this, see Introduction and notes on bk. i.
1. 18. For their garmentes, cf. Tacitus, Germ. xvii.
1. 24. weldynge. Wielding, exercising.
1. 26. maketh their owne. In the Dialogue, Starkey (ed. Cowper, pp. 94-5) represents Lupset as saying that much of the poverty so rife arose from people preferring foreign-made garments to home-made: 'Now you se ther ys almost no man content to were cloth here made at home in our owne countrey, nother lynyn nor wolen, but every man wyl were such as ys made beyond the sea.'

P. 60, l. 2. stonde, i.e. tend.
1. 4. fantasy = to fancy, as often in Elizabethan English.
1. 10. occupyethe whether, i.e. he 'takes up' which of the two he wishes.
1. 15. applye, i.e. ply. The Latin has incumbere, to devote oneself to. Apply, from O.F. aplier, Lat. applicare, means first to put a thing into practical contact with another, then to devote one's energy to something. N. E. D. quotes Elyot, Gov. iii: 'Quintius ... repaired again to his plough and applied it diligently.' The form now in use is 'ply.'
1. 20. the myserable and wreted condytyon, &c. More is here glancing at the hard lives of labourers and artisans in England, their severe work, and their long hours. Dr. Lupton quotes an Act passed in 1496, and, though repealed, revived with but little modification in 1514 (2 Henry VIII, cap. 22), which enacted that every artificer and labourer was to be at his work, between the middle of March and the middle of September, before five in the morning; that he was to have only half an hour for his breakfast, an hour and a half for his dinner: 'and at such time as is here appointed hee shall not sleep; then hee to have but one hour for his dinner, and halfe an hour for his noone-meate; and that hee depart not from his worke between the midst of the said moneths of March and September, till between seven and eight of the clock in the evening ... and that from the midst of September to the midst of March every artificer and labourer be at their work in the springing of the day and depart not till night of the same day.'
1. 24. iust, i.e. equal.
1. 25. iii. before none. 'iii.' is omitted in Ed. 2.
1. 31. voide time, i.e. unoccupied time.
1. 36. lyceensed, i.e. freed.

P. 61, l. 1. solempne, l. 3. namelye; see Glossary.
1. 10. ryse not in = are not elevated; the Lat. is 'consurgit in nullius contemplatione disciplinae.'
1. 11. scyence lyberal. The Lat. has simply disciplinae, branches of education, departments of knowledge.
1. 14. After supper, &c. This reminds us of Cresacre
More's account of More's own household at Chelsea: 'Everyone was busied about somewhat or other: no cards, no dice . . . their recreation was either music of voices or viols' (Life of More, ed. Hunter, p. 107).

1. 21. the battell of nombers, in original Latin numerorum pugna, was known later (see Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 172, col. 2) as 'philosopher's game,' and is thus described by Strutt (Sports and Pastimes, 4th ed., p. 277): 'It is called a "number fight" because in it men fight and strive together by the art of counting or numbering how one may take his adversary's king and create a triumph upon the deficiency of his calculations.' The second game 'the fyghte with vertues' is a moralization of the game of chess probably suggested by Jacobus De Cassulis, Liber Moralis de Ludo Scaccorum, the French version of which, Le Jeu des Echecs moralisé or Le Traité des Nobles et des Gens du Peuple selon le Jeu des Echecs, was translated by Caxton, and enjoyed extraordinary popularity. Possibly the Morality may have suggested the idea to More. For a very curious moralization of the game for satirical purposes see Middleton's A Game of Chess. In any case, these games are More's proposed substitutes for the 'folish and pernicious' games to which he has referred. Plato proposes (Laws, bk. i. p. 643) that children's games should be subservient to the useful purpose of fitting them for the several serious occupations of life. Rabelais, who was a diligent reader of the Utopia, represents Gargantua as receiving useful instruction from the games prescribed for him (see Hist. of Gargantua and Pantagruel, bk. i. ch. xxiii).

1. 24. set fyld. A 'set field' is little more than a synonym for 'battle array.' Cf. Latin original, collata acie.

1. 31. puissaunce, power.
1. 32. frustate. The omission of the 'r' is probably a misprint.
1. 33. sleight = cunning, dexterity, trick. The word is now only used in the phrase 'sleight of hand.' It is akin to 'sly.'
1. 35. lease = lest. One of the many variants of the word. See N.E.D. ; it gives no example of this precise form.
1. 36. looke more narrowly vpon. We now say 'into.'

P. 62, l. 10. be yeilde. The Latin is more vigorous, stertunt, 'are snoring.'
1. 12. relygyous men. One of the commonest complaints in the literature of More's time. For ample illustrations see Starkey's Dialogue, Latimer's Sermons, and Furnivall's Ballads from Manuscripts. Dr. Lupton pertinently quotes Erasmus, De sarsienda Ecclesiae concordia, the passage beginning 'Dolendum est tam multos esse monachos.'

1. 13. Put there to, i.e. add.

1. 16. flocke of stout, bragging, russhe bucklers. Lat. has 'cetratorum nebulonum colluvies,' meaning 'a rabble of shield-bearing ruffians.' 'Russhe-bucklers' here simply means what we should call 'swashbucklers'; it is very improbable that it has anything to do with the idea of 'bucklers as flimsy or as worthless as if they were made of rushes.'

1. 18. valiaunt, i.e. lusty, strong. From the Latin valere, through O.F. vaillant, or valant.

leffe=life. One of the many variants of 'life,' but not given by N.E.D.

1. 21. that men vse. In Ed. 2 Robynson turned this more diffusely: 'that in men's affaires are daylye vsed and frequented.'

1. 24. where money beareth all the swing. Where money is everything. Lat. has 'ubi omnia pecuniis metimur,'—'where we measure all things by money.' Swing means 'sway' or 'control'; cf. Sackville, Induct. Mir. 'That whilome here bare swinge among the best.'

1. 29. so few=only so many as.

1. 33. bisiede, i.e. busied.

P. 63, 1. 9. scaselye, i.e. scarcely. So spelt by Robynson, 49, 13; 108, 12; 132, 26. It may have been adopted for the sake of euphony; cf. the Spanish escaso. Or it may be dialectal: cf. e.g. the local pronunciation of Carisbrooke and Carshalton, where the r disappears.

1. 12. licensed. Freed (after French licencier). Ed. 2 adds 'and discharged from.' N.E.D. quotes from Sir H. Wotton, 'When he listed he could license his thoughts,' i.e. dismiss them (Parallel in Relig. 17).

1. 22. expectation and hoope of him conceaued, i.e. expectation conceived of him.

1. 27. handy occupation, i.e. manual labour.

1. 31. Barzanes. The name was probably suggested to More either by that of the king of Armenia who, according to Diodorus Siculus (ii. 1), was one of the tributaries of the Assyrian Ninus; or that of the Satrap of the Parthyaei mentioned by Arrian, Anabasis, iv. 7. There is of course no Persian or oriental word which can connect it etymologically with ἄδημος.

1. 32. Ademus. This name Robynson mis-spells ‘Adanus’ in his first edition, and misprints ‘Adamus’ in his second. More spells it with the ‘e,’ intending it of course to mean a king without a people, from the Greek a privative and δημος; cf. Anydrus. The word is More’s invention. There is no such word as ἄδημος in Greek, except as the poetical form of ἀπόδημος, ‘away from one’s people.’

P. 64, l. 2. asketh, i.e. demands, requires. Lat. requirit, Cf. Dryden, Virg. Georg. iii. 478 ‘Goats of equal profit ask an equal care.’

1. 9. stoode one man in = cost one man. This idiom is still in common use.

1. 28. Now, Syre. The Latin has Iam, introducing a new subject.

1. 30. homely, i.e. in a plain style.

1. 36. spende, i.e. use, cf. 52, 13. The Cent. Dict. quotes Campion (Arber’s English Garner, i. 56): ‘The oils which we do spend in England for our cloth are brought out of Spain.’

P. 65, l. 5. that ys no thynge passed for, i.e. that is not cared for at all. See note supra, on 8, 5.

1. 12. hapt. Wrapped. The derivation of this word is unknown. It occurs as early as the fourteenth century, and is probably of Norse origin, meaning to cover up, to wrap or tuck up. N. E. D. quotes York Mysteries, xviii. 195 ‘I pray pe Marie happe hym warm,’ and Paston Letters, 1465 ‘Worsted for dobletts to happe me thys cold wynter.’

1. 27. pretended. This is almost in the literal sense of the Latin word from which it is derived, praetendere, ‘stretch forth,’ ‘put forward,’ and so ‘set before’ (their eyes).

1. 32. garnisshing. Culture. The Lat. has cultus.

CHAPTER V

OF THEIR LYUING AND MUTUAL CONVERSATION TOGETHER.

Constitution of social life; regulations and distribution of the population, the surplus employed to colonize and cultivate the waste lands of the continent which are claimed as a right. Family life; regulations about markets and slaughter-houses. Thirty families under a Syphograntus occupy one of the large Halls which are set at equal distances in every street. Arrangements made for the sick. How the meals are arranged in the Halls, and in what order and position the men, women, and children are disposed; moral instruction and recreation provided for them.

In this interesting chapter satire is subordinate to suggestions for increasing the comforts of social life.

P. 66, l. 4. occupieng and enterreyment. Lat. commercia = intercourse.

l. 7. families. It must be remembered that More uses the word familia in the Latin sense of the term, i.e. a household including all who belong to it either in kinship or in association.

l. 8. kinredes. The early and more correct spelling, as the word is derived from cyn = kin, and reden = condition. The d is excrescent; cf. 'thunder.'

l. 19. fewr children, &c. This is very diffuse and misleading. More's word is simply puberes, by which he means adults as distinguished from children (impuberes).

l. 22. appointed. In Ed. 2 Robynson prefixed 'prescribed, or' to 'appointed.'

l. 31. in the nexte lande, i.e. on the mainland nearest the island. Lat. 'in continente proximo.'

l. 32. waste and vnoccupied grounde. The right here claimed by the Utopians is defended by Grotius, De Belli Iure ac Pacis, bk. ii. chap. ii. sect. 17: 'And if there be any waste or barren land within our dominions, that also is to be given to strangers at their request or may be lawfully possessed by them, because whatever remains uncultivated is not to be esteemed a property, only so far as concerns jurisdiction, which always continues the right of the ancient people.' But Puffendorf, Law of Nations (Kenneth's translation), bk. iii. ch. iii. sect. 10, denied the right, basing it merely on the consent of the original occupiers: 'they are not to fix themselves as it were by some right in any spot of waste land they find, but ought to rest satisfied with the station and privileges we assign them'; and Barbeyrac (see note on Grotius ad loc.) agrees with Puffendorf against Grotius.

P. 67, l. 1. the inhabitauntes to them, i.e. 'the same countrey people to them' (the reading of the second edition). Lat. 'ascitis una terrae indigenis.'

l. 12. limited. Defined. The Latin is describunt = 'which they now mark out for themselves.'
1. 14. just cause of warre. According to Grotius, but not according to Puffendorf. See note supra on 66, 32.

1. 24. pestilente plage. The population of London and England greatly suffered from 'sweating sickness,' of which there were several severe visitations between 1485 and 1517. See Hecker's Epidemics of the Middle Ages, 181 seqq.

1. 26. forreyne townes, i.e. on the mainland inhabited by their own countrymen; Latin colonia.

1. 30. conversation, society, intercourse. Cf. Parsons's Conference concerning the next Succession, I. i. 6 'the natural instinct which man hath to live in conversation.'

1. 35. fourf equall partes, i.e. the four wards, quarters; supra, 57, 14.

P. 68, l. 1. seuerall. Used adverbially, = separately. Cf. 'We'll dress us all so several, They shall not us perceive.'—'Robin Hood and the Golden Arrow,' in Child's Ballads, v. 385.

1. 5. without annye gage or pledge, i.e. without any security. The second edition reads 'gage, pawne or pledge,' Lat. hostimentum, a rare word found in Ennius and Plautus, but obsolete in classical Latin.

1. 19. meate markettes. 'Meat' here means any kind of food, not necessarily flesh. The word comes probably from a root connected with Lat. mandere, to chew. Cf. Matt. iii. 4 'his meat was locusts and wild honey.' In the R. V. of the Bible, the 'meat-offering' of the A. V. has been replaced by 'meal-offering.' In this passage More is again glancing at the London of his time. As far back as Edward III's reign, we find a royal order, forbidding the slaughter of beasts in the city, the preamble of which ran: 'Whereas by reason of the slaughters of great beasts in the city, from the putrefied blood of which running in the streets, and the extracts therefrom thrown into the water of the Thames, the air in the same city has been greatly corrupted and infected, and whereby the worst of abominations and stences have been generated,' &c. See Riley's Memorials of London and London Life, p. 356. And the nuisance was not abated.

1. 38. seuerall name, i.e. 'special name;' Lat. nomine suo, 'by its own name.'

P. 69, l. 5. numbre of their halles, i.e. 'the number (of persons) in their halls.'

1. 8. hospitalles. Hospitals grew out of the 'infirmaria' attached to every monastery. In More's time there was only one hospital in our sense of the term, St. Bartholomew's, founded by Rahere, Henry I's jester and minstrel. More here makes several suggestions not carried out till our own time. cured, i.e. looked after, taken care of. Lat. curantur.

1. 14. thronge, i.e. thronged, crowded. See Dialect Dictionary, s.v.

strayte, i.e. confined in space, close. Der. from Lat. strictus = drawn tight, through O.F. estrait (étroit). It is a doublet of 'strict.'

P. 70, l. 7. of small honestie, i.e. rather dishonourable behaviour, in the Latin sense of honestas = 'honour.'

1. 8. dresse, make ready, prepare. O.F. dresser, to arrange. Cf. 'make oneself ready' = to dress, of the Elizabethan dramatists.

1. 13. by course = in turns, Lat. per vices. Cf. A.V., 1 Cor. xiv. 27.

1. 14. sethinge, i.e. boiling. 'Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk,' A.V., Exod. xxiii. 19.

1. 30. Every mother, &c. Such is the provision in Plato. See Republic, v. p. 460, and Plutarch, De Liberis Educandis, ch. v: 'The next thing is the nursing of children, which in my judgment the mothers should do themselves, giving their owne breasts to what they have borne.' So Tacitus notes of the German women, 'sua quemque mater uberibus alit, nec ancillis aut nutricibus delegantur' (Germania, cap. xx).

P. 71, l. 5. meruelous silence. For the behaviour of children at table, see ample information in The Babees Book. For the particular qualities noted by More, cf. 'Latte curtesye and sylene with you dwell' (p. 6); 'Tylle thou have thy fulle servuyse Touche noo misse in noo wyse' (p. 18). Cf. too the 'Stans puer ad mensam,' pp. 28–33 in the same collection. Plutarch also lays great stress on insisting on silence (De Liberis Educandis, cap. 14).

1. 12. ouer wharte = overthwart, across. ouer = upper.

1. 14. meesse. The word 'mess,' O.F. mes, is from the Latin missus, p.p. of mittere, to send, in Low Latin to set or place. It originally meant a portion set or placed, viz. on a table, and afterwards came to mean those sitting at the table. All these arrangements resemble what More must have been familiar with at the Messes of the Inns of Court; but were undoubtedly suggested by those of Lycurgus described by Plutarch in his Life. See his description of the ἄνδρεία or φιλόδίτια.
1. 23. yongers. We do not use this plural now, but say 'young people' or 'young ones.' The grouping of the young with the old at these messes was no doubt suggested by Plutarch's account of the regulations of Lycurgus referred to above.

1. 31. dainties. After this in the Latin there follows a clause in parentheses, omitted by Robynson, 'quarum non tanta erat copia ut posset totam per domum affatim distribui' = of which there was not enough to go round.

1. 32. of both sides them. Ed. 2 reads 'on eche side of them.'

1. 36. of reading = by reading. This was the usual custom in the monasteries, but a marginal note in the Latin version points to its decline: 'Id hodie vix monachi observant. Sermones in conviuiis.' In More's own household it was the custom. 'He used to have one read daily at his table, which being ended he would ask of some of them how they understood such and such a passage,' Cresacre More, Life of More, p. 103.

P. 72, l. 7. towardnes = tendency, inclination.

1. 12. more strengthe. First ed. erroneously inserts 'no' before 'more.'

1. 14. musicke. More's own fondness for music and belief in its composing effects were very great. Cresacre More says that the recreation of his family 'was either music of voices or viols, for which cause he procured his wife to play thereon to draw her mind from the world, to which by her nature she was too much addicted' (Life, p. 107). Dr. Lupton points out that, in Holbein's picture of More's household, a viol is seen hanging up.

nor ... no. Another instance of the double negative, though special emphasis seems unnecessary.

1. 15. bankettes = banquets. See Glossary. Lat. mensa secunda. conceytes nor ionekettes. The Latin has bellaria = what we should call 'dessert,' i.e. fruits, nuts, &c. Conceit orig. a 'conception,' and so a 'fancy' or 'fancy trifle,' as here. Cf. 'He wolde gladlye se conseytes and fantasies at his table' (Ld. Berners' F'roissart, ii. 26. 72). A junket was originally a basket made of rushes (Lat. iuncus). It then got the meaning of a cream cheese or any preparation of cream served on a rush mat. Now it is almost exclusively confined to the popular Devonshire dish consisting of sweetened and flavoured curds with a layer of scalded cream on the top. Here of course the word is used loosely, and means simply 'a dainty delicacy.' Cf. 'Bread pasties, tartes, custardes and other delicate ionckettes dipped in honie,' Adlington, trans. of Apuleius's Golden Ass, x. xlv.

1. 16. for perfumes. Ed. 2 reads or perfumes.

1. 19. maketh for, i. e. contributes to, favours. Cf. 'Not that I neglect those things that make for the dignity of the commonwealth.' Cf. infra, 103, 31.

1. 26. as from whome, seeing that from them.

CHAPTER VI

Of their journeyenge or trauaylynge a brode, &c.

Regulations as to the Utopians leaving their country on visits; as to their recreations; their industrial and mercantile employments; their contempt for gems, the precious metals, and gorgeous apparel; their education and studies in leisure hours; their ethical philosophy based on the tenets of Epicureanism. tempered with Platonism; their ideal of the Summum Bonum—that is, 'pleasure' rationally defined and interpreted; their intelligence, and sympathy with Greek literature and philosophy; their eager welcome of strangers from other countries who can tell them about these countries or teach them anything.

P. 73, 1. 9. som profitable let = a very good reason to prevent them from going.

1. 13. retourne. Dr. Lupton thinks that this curtailment by law of their visits to foreign countries may have been suggested by the provision of Lycurgus for the Spartans: 'He would not permit all that desired it to go abroad and see other countries, lest they should contract foreign manners, or gain traces of a life of little discipline and of a different form of government' (Plutarch, Lives (Langhorne), ed. 1805, p. 155).

1. 23. gentilly enterteined. Lat. humanissime tractatur.

1. 24. of his owne head, on his own authority.

1. 28. shapely. Ed. 1 reads 'shapely.'

P. 74, 1. 12. There be nether, &c. A contrast with the state of things in London, where one of the worst of these iniquities was licensed.

1. 15. in the present sight, 'in full view' (Burnet).

1. 28. the lacke of the one is performed—i. e. the want is at once supplied. Cf. Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. 10: 'Yif thow abate the quantitee of the houre in-equal by daye out of 30, than shall the remenant that leveth performe the hour inequal by night.'

P. 75, l. 3. proffe, proof. The meaning is the uncertainty of what next year's crop may prove or turn out. Lat. eventus.

l. 6. madder. A plant of the genus Rubia: it yields a valuable red dye. The Lat. word here is coccum, cochineal.
purple die felles. Ed. 2 has 'died.' See Glossary. A 'fell' is the skin or hide of an animal.
l. 10. meane = moderate.
l. 19. at a daye = on an appointed day.
l. 20. in so doyng. This is a mistranslation of the original, arising apparently from Robynson's ignorance of the meaning of the Latin phrase nomina facere = to lend (Lupton).

followe the credence of pryuat men: i.e. rely on the credit of individuals. For this meaning of 'credence' cf. Hall, Chron. 212. b 'The Merchaut should stande in adventure, both of losse of stocke and credence.'
l. 22. instrumentes = legal documents, formal agreements. Cf. 'We shall show that Instrument, that was made under the Hand and Seal of the Prisoner at the Bar, as well as others, for Execution of the King; that Bloody Warrant' (Trials of the Regicides, 45).
l. 31. they thinke it no righte nor conscience. Lat. 'haud aequum credunt,' 'they do not think it fair.' 'To think a thing not conscience' is to think it such a thing as the conscience or innate sense of right cannot approve.
P. 76, l. 1. straunge = foreign. Lat. externi.
l. 6. sette togethers by the eares. Said of animals fighting; Lat. 'inter se committi.'
l. 10. beleued. The contempt shown for the precious metals and for gold, of which More proceeds to speak so much and so humorously by way of illustration, appears to have been suggested by Vespucci's account of the tribes visited in his fourth voyage. (See Introduction.) Plato also forbids the use of the precious metals in his Commonwealth, Laws, v. p. 742; cf. his remarks in the Republic, iii. p. 417. Tacitus's Germania, v, notes that the Germans had the same contempt for the precious metals. Cf. too Bacon, New Atlantis (Ed. Bohn, p. 287).
l. 16. guyse and trade, i.e. manners and ways; Lat.
simply moribus. ‘Guise’ is now obsolete in this sense. Cf. ‘A military roughness, resembling most of the Lacedae- monian guise’ (Milton, Areop., ed. Arber, 37). ‘Trade’ is akin to ‘tread’ (O.E. tredan, v), and so primarily meant a ‘foot-step,’ hence ‘path,’ ‘way,’ and so ‘way of living,’ a ‘prac- tice.’ Cf. ‘Thy sin’s not accidental, but a trade’ (Shakespeare, M. for M. iii. 1. 149). The transition to ‘occupation’ and ‘business’ is easy.

1. 18. indyfferente estymer, i.e. impartial judge. ‘I leave to all worthy and indifferent men to judge,’ Raleigh, Apol. 21. estymer = one who esteems or estimates.

1. 22. applied = adapted. Lat. accommodetur.

1. 23. occupye. See Glossary.

1. 31. vnder, i.e. lower in value, inferior to.

1. 34. lacke, i.e. miss, endure the absence of; so, ‘I shall be lov’d when I am lack’d,’ Shakespeare, Cor. iv. 1. 15.

P. 77, l. 3. thynges. For the sentiment, cf. Horace, Odes, iii. 3. 49 seqq.:

'Aurum irreperturn et sic melius situm,
Cum terra celat, spernere fortior
Quam cogere humanos in usus Omne sacrum rapiente dextra,' and Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 687-8.

1. 10. plat, i.e. plate. Lat. ‘phyalas ... aliaque id genus opera fabre excusa.’ (‘Vessels,’ Burnet.)

1. 19. from ours: depending on discrepant and repug- naunt—i.e. ‘very different from ours.’

1. 24. properlie = finely, handsomely; ‘proper’ is very commonly used in this sense; the Latin is elegantissimis.

1. 31. infamed, i.e. disgraced.

P. 78, l. 1. forgo, i.e. give up, go without.

1. 2. at ones. Lat. semel, ‘on one single occasion,’ ‘once.’

Robynson seems to mistake it for simul (Lupton).

1. 15. shamefastenes. This is the correct orthography of the modern form, ‘shamefacedness,’ and has been adopted by the Revisers of the A.V.

1. 17. nuttes, brouches, and puppettes. Dr. Lupton illustrates ‘nuttes’ (nuces), ‘brouches’ (bullae), and ‘puppettes’ (pupae), from Persius, Sat. i. 10, v. 31, and ii. 70 respectively. All three expressions, as he points out, refer to ‘putting away childish things.’

1. 22. Anemolians. From Gk. ἀνεμώλιος, ‘windy’; ἀνεμώλια βάζειν, ‘to talk words of wind,’ is a common phrase in Homer. Dr. Lupton compares Cicero's description of Lepidus, 'homo ventosissimus.' 'Anemolius' was the Poet Laureate of Utopia, the alleged author of the Utopian Hexastichon included in the preliminary matter prefixed to the text (Lupton, p. xciii).

1. 25. those .iii. citizeins, i.e. the old wise men sent yearly from the country to confer about the common matters of the land. See supra, 50, 14.

1. 31. enfamed. Infamed, despised.

P. 79, l. 3. dasell = dazzle. A diminutive and frequentative form of 'daze.'

1. 4. silie = plain, simple. This satire by implication on the ostentatious pomp in dress common in More's time is illustrated by Hall's account of Henry VIII's appearance on the occasion of his procession to the Tower before his marriage with Catharine: 'His grace wered in his upperst apparell a robe of crimsyn velvet furred with armyns [ermines]: his jacket or cote of raised gold; the placard embroidered with diamonds, rubies, emeraudes, greate pearles and other riche stones: a greate bauderiche [baldric] about his neck of large balasses [rubies]' (Chronicle, p. 508, ed. 1809).

1. 5. in chaungeable colours. This may mean either a parti-coloured material or else what is called 'shot' silk. The Lat. is versicolori, which may seem to favour the former meaning.

1. 11. aglettes here means 'small pendants.' The word is the French aiguillette, a small needle; hence it was used for the point or tag of a lace. 'Aiguillette' at the present day, both in French and English, has passed from the tag to the braid itself, and is the technical name for the cord hanging from the shoulder to the breast on certain military and naval uniforms.

1. 15. infamed. Lat. infamare, and French infamer, to render infamous, to disgrace. N. E. D. quotes Holinshed, Chron. i. 66, 2 'Because . . . he somewhat persecuted the Christians, he was infamed by writers.'

1. 17. howe proudelye . . . them selves. A good instance of how Robynson expands; the Lat. has simply 'quo pacto cristas erexerint.'

P. 80, l. 2. lubbor = a dull, clumsy fellow; a dolt. The word is now chiefly used by sailors with 'land' prefixed. The derivation is obscure.

1. 23. For they marueyle, i.e. the Utopians.

‘The fur that warms a monarch warm’d a bear.’

l. 32. of the owne nature = of its own nature, in itself. Lat. has suapte natura.

l. 37. lumpyshe blockehedded churle. The Lat. has plumbeus quispiam, transl. by Burnet as ‘a Man of Lead.’

P. 81, l. i. noughtenes = wickedness. See 31, 19 supra.

l. 6. wyle. The second edition reads ‘wyle and cautele,’ the latter word being practically a synonym for the former and derived from the Lat. cautela, a caution, precaution.

l. 9. dreuell, earlier form of ‘drivel’ = driveller. As it is here a synonym for ‘slave,’ it perhaps does not so much mean ‘imbecile’ as ‘drudge.’ Cf. Erasm. Par. I Cor. xi. 11 ‘To use his wife as a vile dreuell, because she is commaunded to obeye.’ The Lat. has nebulonem.

then shortly after. The sense is that money is the important thing and the first consideration; the man is, as it were, ‘thrown in.’

l. 14. daunger, i.e. power. See, for an exhaustive account of this interesting word, N. E. D.

l. 16. nigeshe penny fathers. ‘Nigeshe’ = niggardly (see Skeat, s.v.). ‘Penny father’ = a miserly person, a skin-flint; the idea being possibly that the attempt to draw one penny from him is attended with the greatest difficulty. Cf. Drayton, Mirrour, p. 1262 ‘To nothing fitter can I thee compare, Than to the son of some rich penny father.’

l. 35. They be taughte learninge. We now come to a very important part of More’s work—his account of the educational system of the Utopians—which is of course satire by implication on the pre-Renaissance theory and practice of it.

P. 82, l. i. syde of the wordle. For this form of the word see Glossary.

l. 8. comen. The strong past participle. Cf. ‘knowne.’

l. 13. clerkes. Originally a ‘cleric’ or ‘ecclesiastic’ in holy orders. As learning was in the Middle Ages practically confined to the clergy, the word came to mean as here a ‘scholar.’ It is also used of the old pre-mediaeval philosophers, Aristotle, &c.

l. 15. For they haue not deuysed, &c. The marginal note in the Latin, ‘Apparet hoc loco subesse nasum,’ prepares us for sarcasm. More is here ridiculing the logical studies so extensively, and to so little purpose, cultivated in the Schools and Universities of the Middle Ages and of his own time. Cf. Bacon’s remarks, Advancement of Learning, bk. i, on barren logical subtleties. Butler also ridicules them—Hudibras, part i. canto i. 65:

‘He was in Logic a great critic,
Profoundly skill’d in Analytic
He could distinguish and divide;
A hair twixt south and south-west side.’

And see too Mephistopheles’ sensible sneers at the same thing in Goethe’s Faust:

‘Mein theurer Freund, ich rath’ euch drum,
Zuerst Collegium logicum,
Da wird der Geist euch wohl dressirt,
In spanische Stiefeln eingeschnürt &c.’

Ed. Tetot, ii. p. 167.

1. 16. restryctyons, amplyfycatyons, and supposytyons in the small Logycalles. Logical terms found in the book referred to by More, viz. the Parva Logicalia, the name given to the last part of the Summulae Logicales of Petrus Hispanus, afterwards, it is said, Pope John XXI, who died in 1277, only eight months after his election.
There seems to be some doubt, however, as to the identification of the author with the pope.

1. 19. seconde intentyons. Rabelais, II. vii ‘Questio subtilissima, utrum chimera in vacuo bombinans possit comedere secundas intentiones’ [in ridicule of subtle discussions of Schoolmen]. As it would be impossible to give a clearer definition and account of what is meant by ‘second intentions’ than is given by Mansel in his edition of Aldrich’s Logic, I shall content myself with transcribing his note.

‘A first intention or notion is a conception under which the mind regards things, whether facts of external or of internal perception. Thus, the individual Socrates is regarded by the mind as man, animal, body, substance. All these are first intentions. And a mental state may be successively regarded as a smell, a sensation, a fact of consciousness. These again are first intentions.

‘A second intention or notion is a conception under which the mind regards its first intentions as related to each other. Thus the relation of animal to man and of man to animal is expressed in the second intention genus or species. First intentions as conceptions of things are pre-dicable in the individuals conceived under them. Thus we may say "Socrates is man, animal," &c. Second intentions are not so predicable: we cannot say, "Socrates is species, genus,"' &c.—Mansel's Aldrich (ed. 1842), pp. 20, 21. For a very lucid and interesting dissertation on First and Second Intentions see Mr. Shadworth Hodgson's Time and Space, 33-45. Marcus Aurelius I. xvii, agreeing with More, enumerates among the things which he was thankful for, the fact that he had not wasted time on the subtilties of Logie.

I. 21. man hymselfe in commen, i.e. man in the abstract, man regarded not as an individual, but καθόλου (in general).

I. 24. the course of the starres, &c. Observe how the good sense of the Utopians separates Astronomy, which they study, from Astrology which they despise. Rabelais (Pantagruel, bk. ii. ch. viii), in the admirable letter which Gargantua writes to Pantagruel, recalling in many respects More's scheme of education and dated from Utopia, speaks in the same way of Astronomy and Astrology.

P. 83, l. 9. manners and vertue. We now come to the moral philosophy of the Utopians. It is founded partly on the doctrines of Epicurus, partly on those of Stoicism, and partly on those of Christianity: from the first is derived the tenet that the summum bonum of life is pleasure in the proper sense of the term; from the second the precept that life should be regulated 'according to nature'; from the third, the association of Theology, and Theological belief, with Ethical Philosophy. For the two former More has drawn almost perhaps entirely on Cicero's De Finibus.

I. 20. chiefyste parte of mans felycytye, &c. This was the teaching of Epicurus. Vespucci had said of some of his newly discovered tribes, from which More (see Introduction) seems partly to have derived the fable of the Utopia, that they were followers rather of the Epicureans than of the Stoics; 'vivunt secundum naturam, et Epycuri potius dici possunt quam Stoici' (Mundus Novus, fol. 3 verso).

I. 23. sharpe, bytter, and rygorous. The epithets are unsuitable and hardly the meaning conveyed by the Latin, 'grauis et se Rivera est ferequre tristis et rigida.' Burnet's is an improvement: 'notwithstanding its severity and roughness.'

P. 84, l. 3. the lesse pleasure should not be a let, &c. De Finibus, i. cap. 14.

I. 14. onlye in that pleasure that is good. Cf. De Finibus, ii. 15 'Idem (Epicurus) dicit ... non posse iucunde vivere nisi etiam honeste.'

1. 18. life ordered according to nature. To this phrase the Stoics attached different meanings, but the meaning attached to it by More is no doubt that attached to it in De Finibus, iv. 10. 27 'secundum naturam vivere; quod est ... habere ea quae secundum naturam sunt, vel omnia, vel plurima et maxima.' To live 'according to nature' was to live in accordance with the entire course of the world, as opposed to individual and special ideas and impulses, and according to a man's whole nature, not to a part of it only. See Grant's Ethics of Aristotle, vol. i. p. 255, and Long's Marcus Aurelius (ed. Bohn), p. 56.

1. 24. of whos goodnes it is that we be, i.e. have our being, exist.

1. 25. in possibilitie. Misprinted 'impossibilitie' in Ed. i.

1. 31. inioyne = enjoin. From Lat. iniungere = to impose (a penalty or duty).

laboures, watchinges, and fastinges. There is an allusion here evidently to 2 Cor. vi. 5, though, as Dr. Lupton points out, it is only in the English rendering.

P. 85, l. 5. For a joyful lyfe. Robynson's punctuation is here rather perplexing; dashes after 'euell' and 'hurtefull' instead of commas would make the sense clearer.

1. 12. natur biddeth the. Cf. De Finibus, i. 9. 30.

1. 18. according to the prescript of nature, i.e. according to the law or ordinance of nature. Lat. 'ex cuius praescripto.'

1. 21. not without. Lat. 'quod certe merito facit.'

1. 23. carke. A synonym of 'care.' From the late Latin carcare, 'to load'; cf. charge. Hence 'to load oneself with care.' See N. E. D. So in Kingsley, Alton Locke's Song 9 'Why for sluggards cark and moil?'

1. 30. Wherfore their opinion is. St. John quotes Hobbes, De Cive, i. 3. 36 'Cum omni homine vel servanda est fides vel non paciscendum: hoc est, vel declaratum bellum vel certa et fida habenda est pax.'

1. 36. constitute = constituted. This form of the p. p. is still retained in technical phraseology in Scotland (N. E. D.).

P. 86, l. 1. Thies lawes not offendid. Nominative absolute, not often used in English. It is an attempt to translate the essentially Latin ablative absolute; the original has 'His inoffensiss legibus,' 'so long as these laws are not violated.'
NOTES: BOOK II

1. 8. they selfe = thy self.
1. 9. humanitie = politeness.

1. 27. Appetite they ioyne to nature. That is to say, in their definition of pleasure they not only include every motion and state of the body, &c., but healthy or right desires or inclinations. The Lat. is 'Appetitionem naturae non temere addunt,' naturae being, as Dr. Lupton suggests, not dative but genitive.

P. 87, l. 1. taken place, i.e. become deeply seated. Lat. insederunt.

1. 11. counterfeit kinde of pleasure. From his reference to false notions of pleasure, More goes on to satirize directly some leading foibles of his time—vanity in dress and in ancestry.

1. 19. thought. Both editions misprint 'thoughe.'
1. 21. and not by their mistakyng, i.e. and not through a mistake on their own part.

1. 30. vayne and vnprofitable honoures. With this passage compare Erasmus's comments on 'Sileni Alcibiadis,' Adagia, chil. iii. cent. iii. prov. 1, the passage beginning: 'Videas in nullis minus esse verae nobilitatis quam in Thrasonibus istis qui vetustis stemmatibus, qui torquibus aureis, qui splendidis cognominibus summam iactant nobilitatem,' &c.

1. 35. for the opinion of nobilitie, i.e. in considering themselves of noble birth.

P. 88, l. 5. of one heare: i.e. even by a single hair, not a whit, the less noble, a Latin idiom; cf. Cicero, Q. Fr. ii. 16 'ego ne pilo quidem minus me amabo.'

1. 6. take pleasure ... in gemmes. The rage of Henry VIII and his courtiers for the ostentatious display of jewelry is notorious, and is frequently commented on by the writers of the time. More's own simplicity, and contempt for such distinction as he has here described, is well illustrated by an anecdote told of him by Cresacre More: 'He exercised acts of humility that he made most worldie men to wonder at him. On the Sunnedaines euen when he was Lord Chancellor he wore a surplice and sang with the singers at high mass and matins in his parish church at Chelsea, which the Duke of Norfolk on a time finding sayde, "God bodie, God bodie—My Lord Chancellor, a Parish Clarke! you disgrace the king and his office." "Nay," sayde Sir Thomas, smiling, "your grace may not thinke I dishonour my prince in my dutifulness to his Lord and Yours"" (Life of More, p. 19).

1. 12. stylle=constantly, continually.
1. 27. Or of them, i.e. or what shall I say of them?
1. 35. hoppest=dancest; N. E. D. quotes Coverdale 1 Kings xviii. 26 'They hopped aboute the altare as their vse was to do.' Psalms lxviii. 16 'Why hoppe ye so, ye greate hilles?' The Lat. has gestis, to throw oneself about, to be transported.

P. 89, l. 9. thu=thou, the reading of Ed. 2.
1. 24. reiecte, i.e. given over.
1. 26. they counte huntyng. This tenderness to animals and objection to unnecessary slaughter—one of the great notes of the Utopia—More shared in common with Pythagoras and the Pythagoreans. With his remarks here compare what Plutarch says in his De Solertia Animalium, i and ii, about hunting, to which pursuit he traces the cruelty and inhumanity of men: 'Men became insensible and inhuman, having once tasted of murder and being accustomed by hunting and following the chase not only to behold without pity the wounds and blood of wild beasts, but to rejoice at their being killed and slaughtered': and see also his De Esu Carnium, Orat. ii; cf. Ovid, Met. xv. 75 seq.; Gay, Fable xxxvi; Pope, Essay on Man, Ep. iii. 160-8, and Thomson's eloquent invective, Autumn, 384-457; Shelley, Queen Mab, viii. 77-82 and 111-18.

P. 90, l. 20. of the good lyfe past. In the Latin this sentence is followed by 'et spes non dubia futuri boni,' omitted by Robynson. Burnet: 'and the assured Hope of a future Happiness.'
1. 28. voided=evacuated.
1. 32. scratchynge. First ed. stratchinge.

P. 91, l. 2. vpright. The Latin is aequabili=here 'well balanced,' with all the 'humours' in harmonious concert.
1. 5. yf yt be not letted nor assaulted with no greiffe, i.e. if it be not checked or attacked by pain.
1. 20. whyche sayde that stedfasthe and quyete healthe. The substance of this passage seems to have been partly suggested by the arguments of Cicero and Torquatus on the summum bonum in bk. i of the De Finibus, and partly by the argument between Socrates and Callicles in Plato's
NOTES: BOOK II 213

Gorgias, pp. 494-5, but mainly by the discussion in bk. ix of the Republic, pp. 583-7.

II. 24-5. by some owtwarde motion. Robynson is translating the extrario of the first three Latin editions, printed by Dr. Lupton contrario. The allusion is to the 'externall or outwarde pleasure' of l. 7, supra. Robynson has omitted nisi (which is in the Latin editions) before motu; ' nisi motu quopiam extrario sentiri.'

P. 92, l. 3. procedyng, i.e. progress. A synonym to 'onwardnes' following.

II. 8-9. thee pristynate strengthe, i.e. its former strength. Lat. pristinatus.

l. 11. imbrace the owne wealth, i.e. cling to and take to itself its own good. Lat. 'bona sua amplexabitur.'

l. 12. For that, i. e. for where, as in the second edition.

l. 13. For what man wakynge, &c. Robynson is here a little obscure. Burnet's version is better: 'for what man is in health, that does not perceive [is not conscious of it] when he is awake?'

l. 16. stonysh = stony.

sleeping sicknes. Robynson changed this in the next version to 'lethargie.' Sleeping sickness is, as is well known, the name now popularly given to the disease called 'nelavan,' which attacks the negroes on the west coast of Africa and in Uganda, and generally ends fatally.

l. 21. they imbrace. This in the Latin is properly followed by ergo, therefore, omitted by Robynson.

l. 32. preuelye stealynge one, i.e. secretly stealing on.

l. 35. carefull greyffes, i.e. pains which give care and trouble.

l. 37. sealynge. Robynson's translation is obscure; it has been suggested that sealynge may be a misprint for fealynge or healynge. The Latin is: 'ita hoc quoque voluptatis genere non egere quam deliniri praestiterit.' Ed. 2 reads, 'then thereby to be eased of the contrarie grief.'

l. 38. The whyche kynde of pleasure. Cf. Plato, Republic, ix. p. 583: 'There are many other cases of suffering in which mere rest and cessation of pain . . . is extolled as the highest pleasure?' 'Yes.' . . . 'When pleasure ceases, that sort of rest will not be pleasant but painful?' 'Doubtless.' 'Then the intermediate state of rest will be pleasure and will also be pain?' 'That is assumed.' 'But can that which is neither become both?' 'I should say not.' 'And both pleasure and pain are motions in the soul, are they not?' 'Yes.' 'But that which is neither was just now shown to be rest and not motion and in a mean between them?' 'Yes.' 'How then can we be right in saying that the absence of pain is pleasure or that the absence of pleasure is pain?' 'Impossible.'

P. 93, l. 11. egal = equal. O. F. egal; this form of the word, preserved also in the substantive egality and the verb egall, was common till about the middle of the seventeenth century.

1. 20. which of necessitye, &c. The second edition is clearer: 'to the necessarie vse whereof they must from time to time continually be forced and druen.'

1. 29. no other kind. Cf. the well-known lines in Ovid, Met. i. 85-6 'Os homini sublime dedit, caelumque tueri Iussit, et erectos ad sidera tollere vultus,' with the comments of Cicero, De Nat. Deorum, ii. 10. 56; De Senectute, 21; De Legibus, i. 9, where the same idea is put very strikingly: 'Nam cum ceteros animantes abiecisset ad pastum, solum hominem erexit, ad caelique quasi cognationis, domicilliique pristini, conspectum excitavit.'

1. 35. allowe = commend, approve of. The English word identifies, after O. F., the two Latin words, allaudare, to praise, and allocare, to assign. Hence its various meanings. reioysinges. Robynson, as Dr. Lupton points out, has not given the force of the Latin condimenta in the above word. Burnet is better: 'as the pleasant Relishes and Seasonings of Life,' but it may possibly be a misprint for releysinges, relishes.

1. 36. cautell = precaution.

P. 94, l. 2. yet to dyspyse, &c. In this most interesting passage (to which a marginal note in the Latin original directs special attention), More seems to question the wisdom of that severe ascetic discipline which, in the milder form, he himself practised. But he is guarded, and merely condemns it in its harsher form where it is not conducive to the common good. It is a condemnation of such fanatics as St. Simeon Stylites.

1. 4. sloughishnes = sluggishness.

1. 9. forborne, i.e. denied, refrained from. Cf. 'Fruits—Whose taste, too long forborn, at first assay Gave elocution to the mute' (Milton, P. L. ix. 747).

1. 10. at Goddes hand. Ed. i reads 'of God.'

1. 18. in her daunger, i.e. in her power, under an obligation to her; v. supra, 81, 14.
NOTES: BOOK II 215

1. 36. defende them. Note how More prudently guards himself.

1. 37. husbande theyr grounde: cultivate.

P. 95, l. 4. exploited and furnished, i. e. performed, achieved, administered. Lat. has simply administrata. Cf. ‘They departed without expoytinge their message’ (Elyot, Gov. I. xxvi). ‘Exploit’ has lost this meaning, and now means either technically to work (a mine, &c.), or else in a derogatory sense ‘to utilize for one’s own ends.’

1. 20. Greke. For the point of this, and the association of Utopian ideals with classical, see General Introduction.

1. 38. free. Both editions misprint faee.

P. 96, l. 2. lesse then iii. yeres. Milton, in his Tractate on Education, allows one year for mastering the rudiments and making much progress in Greek.

11. 4-5. wythout anny staye, i. e. without any stopping or hesitating; Lat. inoffense.

1. 5. if the booke were not false, i. e. if the text were not at fault.

1. 7. allyaunte, i. e. allied, akin. The word is very rare.

1. 15. pretye = moderately large. The word was used to express moderately great in size, quantity, duration, &c. It is now used almost exactly in the same way, but adverbially, necessitating an adjective or adverb after it. For the former use, cf. ‘A pretty while these pretty creatures stand, Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling’ (Shakespeare, Lucrece, i. 1233).

fardell, i. e. bundle. The word is possibly akin to the Arabic fardah, a package. It is common in English of this period, though now obsolete. Cf. ‘There lyes such Secrets in this Farthell and Box, which none must know but the King’ (Shakespeare, W. T. iv. 4. 783).

1. 16. rather neuer than shortlye, i. e. never to return rather than quickly (to return).

1. 18. Theophrastus. A Greek naturalist and philosopher, born at Eresos in Lesbos about 370 B.C. He afterwards went to Athens and heard Plato and Aristotle, to the latter of whom he was particularly attached and from whom he inherited the whole Aristotelian library, the largest then known. He succeeded Aristotle as head of the Peripatetic school, over which he presided for thirty-five years till his death in 288 B.C. He was the reputed author of 227 works, most of which however are lost. The History of Plants, Causes of Plants, and the well-known Characters are perhaps his most important extant works.

1. 20. mormosett. A 'marmoset' is a small kind of American monkey (Hopale jacchus). For the history of the word, see Skeat's Dictionary. The Lat. has cercopithecus, a long-tailed ape.

1. 24. Lascaris. The Erotemata or Grammatica Graeca of Constantine Lascaris was published at Milan in 1476, and has the distinction of being the first Greek book ever printed.

Theodorus. Theodorus Gaza was born at Thessalonica in 1398. The Greek Grammar, his chief work, was first published by Aldus at Venice in 1495. This work was held in very high estimation by subsequent scholars, and was generally recognized as the best of its kind. Theodorus died in 1478.

1. 25. Hesichius. Hesychius, a Greek grammarian of Alexandria, was the author of a Greek lexicon. Although the text is very corrupt, the book has been of considerable use in interpreting obscure and rare words and phrases of the great Greek classical writers. It was not known till the sixteenth century, when it was published by Aldus in 1514. Little is known about the author, but he flourished probably towards the end of the fourth century A.D.

1. 26. Dioscorides. Pedanius Dioscorides was a native of Anazarbus in Cilicia, and flourished in the reign of Nero. In early life he probably accompanied the Roman armies through many countries as physician. He has left us his celebrated Materia Medica in five books, which treats of all the then known medicinal substances and their properties. This work enjoyed a universal celebrity and popularity for over sixteen centuries. The first edition of the Greek text was published by Aldus in 1499 at Venice.

1. 27. Lucianes. Lucian, the Greek Voltaire, was born at Samosata in Syria about 125 A.D., and is one of the most interesting and amusing of Greek writers. He was evidently a great favourite with More as he was with Erasmus, and More translated four of his dialogues into Latin (see Introduction).

11. 28–9. Aristophanes. The greatest of the Greek comic poets, born about 448 B.C. He is said to have written fifty-four plays, but only eleven are extant in their entirety.
He died about 388 B.C. The first printed edition, containing nine plays, was published by Aldus at Venice in 1498.

1. 29. Euripides. The third and last of the great Greek tragedians. Born at Salamis in 480 B.C., died 406 B.C. The first edition of his plays, consisting however only of four, was published by J. Lascaris at Florence at the end of the fifteenth century. But Aldus in 1503 brought out an edition containing seventeen.

Sophocles. The second of the trio of Greek tragedians, born 496 B.C. He entered into competition with his great predecessor Aeschylus in 468 B.C. Only seven of his plays are now extant, which in their probable order are Ajax, Antigone, Electra, Oedipus Tyrannus, Trachiniae, Oedipus Coloneus, Philoctetes. He died in 405 B.C. The first edition of his plays was printed at Venice in 1502.

Aldus. From the preceding notes it may be perhaps correctly inferred that Aldus was the most celebrated of the early printers. Aldus Pius Manutius was the founder of the firm which was carried on after him by his two sons. The works that issued from this establishment were renowned for the correctness of the typography, and so great was the demand for them that the printers of Lyons and Florence began the system of issuing counterfeit Aldines as early as 1502. The press continued in active operation for upwards of 100 years, from 1490 to 1597, and printed 908 different works. The distinguishing mark is an anchor, entwined by a dolphin, inscribed either with Festina lente or Sudavit et alsit.

1. 30. Thucydides. The greatest Greek historian. He was born probably in 471 B.C. and wrote a history of the Peloponnesian War in eight books, though it is doubtful if the whole of the eight is from his hand. After living in exile for twenty years he returned to Athens in 404 B.C. But the date and manner of his death are unknown. The Greek text of his work was first published by Aldus in 1502.

1. 31. Herodotus. The 'father of history.' Born about 484 B.C. at Halicarnassus. His History, written in nine books, is a general history of the Greeks and Barbarians (i.e. non-Greeks) between the fall of Croesus 546 B.C. and the capture of Sestos 478 B.C. He is said to have died at Thurium, but the date is unknown. The first Greek edition of his work was printed by Aldus in 1502.

Herodian. A Greek historian. Wrote a history in eight books of the Roman Emperors of his own lifetime, beginning with the death of Marcus Aurelius A.D. 180 and ending with the accession of the younger Gordianus in 238 A.D.

II. 31-2. Tricius Apinatus. A name coined by More to signify a 'trifler' or 'fribble.' Apina and Trica were two towns in Apulia said to have been sacked by Diomede, but so vile and insignificant before their destruction that they had become proverbs for vileness and insignificance. See Forcellini's Lexicon, sub verb. Apina. Martial in two epigrams, i. 112. 2 and xiv. i. 7, uses them to signify trifles: 'Sunt apinae tricaeque et si quid vilius istis.'

1. 33. Hippocrates. The 'father of medicine.' Born at Cos 460 B.C. Before his time the science of medicine was confined to the priests or else taken up in a subordinate way by the philosophers of the age. He wrote many medical books, and died in 357 B.C. The first Greek edition of his works was published by Aldus in 1526.

Galenes Microtechne. Claudius Galenus, the famous Greek physician, was born at Pergamus 131 A.D. He attended M. Aurelius, the Roman Emperor, and also his two sons, and was afterwards physician to the Emperor Severus. He died about 201 A.D. His most important works are De Anatomicis Administrationibus, and De Usu Partium Corporis Humani. The Microtechne mentioned, i. e. 'Little Art,' was in contradistinction to the larger book known as Megalotechne or Methodus Medendi, a fuller and more elaborate work.

1. 36. Phisick, i. e. medicine. Lat. res medica.

1. 14. maruelour, i. e. admirer. Lat. admirator.

1. 20. feates, i. e. devices, arts.

1. 33. rides, i. e. reeds. Lat. papyrus, whence our word 'paper.' The papyrus reed from which paper was originally made is now very scarce in lower Egypt, but it still exists about the lake Menzaleh, near Damietta, as well as in Sicily.

1. 36. assayinge, i. e. essaying, attempting. The word is now archaic, except as applied to the testing of metals. Cf. Spenser, Sonn. lib. 8 'Never ought was excellent assayde Which was not hard t'atchieve and bring to end.'

feate, i. e. method of doing, knack.

P. 93, 1. 7. sene, i. e. versed, skilled; an imitation of the Lat. spectatus not uncommon in Elizabethan English. Cf. Hakluyt's Voyages, ii. 2 'She was see ne in the Hebrew, Greek e and Latin tongues'; and Spenser, F. Q. vi. 6. 3 'For he right well in Leache's craft was see ne.'

1. 10. wonders, i. e. wondrously. The old genitive case of 'wonder' used adverbially. Cf. needs, &c.; 'Me mette swiche a swevenyng, That lykede me wonders wel.'—Rom. of the Rose, Chaucer, ed. Skeat, i. 27.

1. 17. geer. For the derivation of this word see Glossarial Index, and for the order of senses N. E. D. Its earliest meanings were 'apparel,' 'dress'; 'arms,' 'accoutrements'; 'harness'; 'apparatus,' 'machinery'; 'movable property'; 'material substance,' &c. Hence it came to mean 'affairs,' 'business generally,' as here. Cf.

'But I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.'
(Shakespeare, 2 Henry VI, iii. 1. 91.)

1. 20. owte landes, i. e. foreign countries.

vre : not from same root as use, being adapted from O. F. eure, Lat. opera, 'work.' It was common in M. E., but became obsolete about the middle of the seventeenth century.

CHAPTER VII

OF BONDEMEN, SICKE PERSONS, ETC.

Slave labour, performed either by criminals convicted of some heinous offence, or criminals condemned to death in some other state, or by voluntary slaves. Their treatment of the sick and encouragement of suicide in particular cases. Their marriage regulations: when divorce is allowed, their treatment of adulterers. How criminal offences are punished by them. Their delight in social buffoons; their abhorrence of jesting at deformed people, and contempt for such vanity as the application of cosmetics to the face. Their encouragement of noble and virtuous actions by the institution of rewards. The fewness of their laws and their dislike to lawyers and pettifoggers. Their regard for justice, and their incorruption, the admiration of neighbouring states. Why they make no leagues—reflections on the characters and practices of contemporary princes.

P. 220, l. 6. nor bondemens, i.e. nor of bondemens, which is the reading of ed. 2. So also ‘annye man’ = ‘of any man’ in l. 7.

l. 15. for gramercye, i.e. gratis, which is the word in the Latin. A contraction for ‘grand merci,’ great thanks. ‘Gramercy’ was an interjection meaning originally ‘thanks’; hence ‘for gramercy’ means ‘for a thank you,’ ‘for nothing.’ Cp. ‘He made Corn to be distributed to the People at a very mean price to some, and for gramercy to the poor’ (North, Plutarch, 966).

l. 17. bandes. Bonds.

l. 21. godlye. In a godly way. Latin ‘ad virtutem egregie instructi.’

l. 25. drudge. One employed in mean or servile work a ‘hack.’ The derivation of the word is obscure; it is probably allied to the Lowland Scotch verb ‘dree,’ which means to ‘endure,’ ‘undergo.’ Cf. ‘Many they held as drudges and captuyes’ (Fabyan, Chron. vii. 497).

l. 27. handle and order. Edition 2 reads ‘intreate and order,’ possibly so as not to repeat the word from the second sentence preceding. The Lat. has tractant.

l. 30. as thereto accustomede. Being accustomed to it.

P. 100, l. 3. as I sayde. Supra, ch. v. pp. 69 sqq.

l. 4. lette nothynge at all passe, i.e. omit nothing at all, which is the literal translation of the Latin, viz. ‘nihil prorsus omittunt.’

l. 9. But yf the dysense, &c. In so devout a Christian as More this defence of suicide is truly remarkable, even when we consider the conditions under which it is alone represented as justifiable. Orthodox Christian ethics have always been unanimous against it. More’s favourite divine St. Augustine absolutely forbids it under any circumstances (see De Civit. Dei, lib. i. ch. xv-xxiv), though some ‘heretics’ allowed it: see Fulke’s Defence, Works, vol. i. p. 23, and Whitgift, Works (Parker Society), vol. iii. p. 57. But suicide under the condition specified by More was unanimously allowed and even encouraged by the Ancients, Stoics and all other sects alike, even by Plato: see Laws, bk. ix. p. 873; for it is doubtful whether the apparently unqualified condemnation of it by Pythagoras (see Cicero, De Senectute, ch. xx), by Plato in the Phaedo and Apology, and by certain philosophers, was meant to include such cases as More describes. At Marseilles, according to Valerius Maximus, II. vi, 'Poison, a compound of hemlock, was kept in the city and given to those who could assign to the Council of Six Hundred a sufficient reason for wishing to rid themselves of life: for, though the Council took care that no one should have it without being able to assign such sufficient reasons, they were quite willing to provide the means of easy death to such as could assign such reasons.' For the whole question see Lipsius, Manuductio ad Stoicam Philosophiam, and lib. iii. Diss. 22 and 23; Donne's Biathanatos, passim; Hume's Essay on Suicide; More, Essay on Suicide; and Lecky's Hist. of European Morals, vol. i. In 1872 what More here inculcates was seriously proposed in a powerful and eloquent little work by Mr. S. D. Williams entitled Euthanasia. See for an account of it, and for an interesting discussion on the subject, Tollemache's Stones of Stumbling, pp. i-32. But above all see the admirable disquisition in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. iv, Ed. 1628, pp. 419-23; a short passage from which may be quoted:—'To prejudicate his (i.e. God's) determination is but a doubt of goodnesse in him who is nothing but goodnesse. But when indeed he doth either by sickness or outward force lay death upon us, then are wee to acknowledge that such is his pleasure, and to know that all is well that hee doth. That we should be masters of ourselves we can show at all no title nor claime; since neither we made ourselves, nor bought ourselves, we can stand upon no other right but his gift, which hee must limit as it pleaseth him.'

1. 13. overlyuing hys owne deathe. 'Overlive' is of course the literal translation of the Latin supervivat; we should now say 'outlive' or 'survive.' More means that a man is to all practical purposes dead when he ceases to be of any further use in the world, after which he is outliving his death. For 'overlive' in this sense, see Sidney, Arcadia, iii 'Basilius will not long overlive this loss.'

1. 18. take a good hope to hym, i.e. rely on good hope; Lat. 'bona spe fretus.'

1. 22. by other, i.e. by others.

1. 24. lyse, i.e. 'lose,' a variant not recognized by the Cent. Dict.

1. 30. dye in theyre sleape. The phrase is sufficiently expressive for a death by anaesthetics. The Lat. has sopiti soluuntur, 'having been put to sleep, they are released.'
1. 31. wythowte annye fealinge. Both editions misprint 'fealinge.'

ll. 32-3. nor they vse no lesse dilygence. They do not relax their care and attention over him, even though he does not terminate his life.

1. 34. beleuynge thys to be an honorable death. Robynson has here mistranslated through mistaking persuasos for persuasi, and connecting it with the former clause. Burnet turns it correctly, though loosely: 'They believe that a voluntary death, when it is chosen upon such an authority, is honourable.'

Elles, 'on the other hand'; Lat. alioqui. With this cf. Plato, Laws, ix. p. 873: 'The suicide who deprives himself by violence of his appointed share of life, not because the law of the State compels him, nor yet under the compulsion of some painful and inevitable fortune which has come upon him, nor because he has had to suffer from irremediable and intolerable shame,'...should be 'cast naked out of the city, and all the magistrates on behalf of the whole city shall carry stones, and each of them shall cast a stone upon the head of the dead man,...and after that they shall bear him to the borders of the land and throw him out unburied.'

1. 37. of fyer, i.e. of being cremated.

P. 101, l. i. xviii. yeres. This is the age prescribed by Aristotle, Politics, vii. 16; but he thinks the proper age for a man to be thirty-seven or thereabouts.

1. 3. bodely. Ed. 2 'actually.'

1. 5. whether = whichever, which one (of two). Cf. 'Whether of them twaine did the will of his father?' (Matt. xxii. 31, A.V.).

1. 22. wower = wooer.

1. 24. disallowed it = disapproved of it. Cf. 'Though they...do take liberty to...use...sports and exercises upon the Lord's Day, yet most of their ministers disallow it' (Ray, Journ. 436).

1. 28. in hassarde, 'at stake.' Cf. 'My reputation, and my worship had beene in hazard' (Fleming, Panopli. Epist. 260).

1. 36. esteme, i.e. value, estimate her worth. Lat. aestiment.
P. 102, l. 2. myslyke, i. e. disgust, offend. Cf. 'Bellaria
. oftentimes comming herselfe . to see that nothing should be amis to mislile him,' Greene, Pandosto (1581). For a commentary on what More says here see Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, ch. iii.

l. 13. well a wolrthe, 'alas!' See Glossarial Index;
and cf. 'wellaway,' which occurs in Chaucer and in Piers Plowman in this sense.

l. 29. a greate poynte of crueltie. Swift, with characteristic cynicism, reverses this, and makes old age a ground ipso facto for divorce (Gulliver's Travels, part III. ch. x).
The thought, as Dr. Lupton points out, is from Terence, Phormio, iv. 1 'CH. Pol me detinuit morbus. De. Unde? aut qui? CH. Rogas? Senectus ipsast morbus.'

l. 33. withall. This is another form of 'with,' not infrequently used when 'with' ended a sentence. Cf.
'These banished men that I have kept withal' (Shake-

l. 34. man and the woman cannot well agree. Here More is again as paradoxical from the orthodox point of view as he was in his defence of suicide, but Milton agrees with him, seriously contending 'that indisposition, unfitness and contrariety of mind arising from a cause in nature unchangeable, hindering, and ever likely to hinder, the main benefits of conjugal society, which are solace and peace, is sufficient cause for divorce provided there be "mutual consent" (Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, ch. i).

P. 103, l. 11. auouters, i. e. adulterers. O. Fr. avouttre.
Cf. 'God wyll condempne advouters and whorekeepers' (Bale, Yet a Curse at the Romyshe Foxe, fol. 70 c).

l. 12. luste, 'like,' 'wish.'

l. 22. eftsones: 'eft' = a second time, again, + soon.
Thus it means lit. 'soon afterwards,' or simply 'soon.' Cf.
'If he do not accomplishe the order . . . to be eftsones taken and whipped' (Act 22 Hen. VIII, c. 12).

l. 28. husbandes chastice, &c. The old Common Law of England allowed the husband to give his wife 'moderate correction,' says Dibdin. The Civil Law gave him the right to castigate her severely with whips and cudgels ('flagellis et fustibus acriter verberare uxorem'). See Dibdin's Note, and Blackstone's Commentaries (vol. i. p. 44, edit. 1787).

1. 30. open punyshemente, i. e. public punishment.
Cf. 'If Demetrius . . . have a matter against any man, the law is open' (Acts xix. 38).
l. 31. maketh for, i. e. is for the advantage of, favours, tends to. Cf. Ben Jonson, Epicoene, v. i. 'Not that I neglect those things that make for the dignity of the commonwealth.'

l. 32. But moste commonlye. Perhaps suggested by the policy of Anysis in Herodotus (ii. 137), who, when an Egyptian committed any crime, would not have him put to death, but employed such criminals on public works, apportioning their labour and the time of it to the magnitude of their offences.

P. 104, l. 1. feare other, i. e. frighten others. Lat. has deterrent, which is stronger than the English word derived from it. For the active use of 'fear,' cf. 'Shall it not feare us from so foule a custome?' (Babington, Commandm. 135). Also, 'Warwicke was a Bugge that fear'd us all' (Shakespeare, 3 Hen. VI, v. 2. 2).

l. 4. desperate. First ed. reads desperace.

l. 14. moueth to = attempts.

l. 17. pretensed = pretended, i. e. intended or designed. Lat. praetensus, p. p. of praetendo. Cf. Matt. v. 28; and Juvenal, xiii. 208-9 'Nam scelus intra se tacitum qui cogitat ulla Facti crimen habet.'

l. 19. too haue no lette, i. e. to have no hindrance, to be successful.

l. 21. sette greate store by fooles. Plutarch tells us that Lycurgus dedicated a little statue to the god of laughter in each hall, as 'he considered facetiousness a seasoning of their hard exercises and diet, and therefore ordered it to take place on all proper occasions' (Life of Lycurgus, Langhorne's version, ed. 1846, p. 61). Gregorius Lamprecht, Chancellor of Wirtemberg, and afterwards of Charles V's council, used to say that every prince should have two fools, one whom he might tease, and the other who might tease him, 'einen den er vexirt, den andern der ihn vexirt' (Flogel, Geschichte der Hofnarren, p. 7). Rabelais set the same store by them; see Pantagruel, bk. iii. ch. xxxvii. More's fool, Henry Pattinson, is introduced into Holbein's well-known sketch of More's family.

l. 27. tuition. Here simply 'care,' the original meaning of the word. Cf. Paston Letters, i. 103 'The . . . tuycyon of your seid realme of Fraunce.'

l. 34. dishoneste, i. e. dishonour or dishonourable conduct. Also cf. 'Shame, that eschueth alle deshonestee' (Chaucer, Persons Tale, 759).
1. 36. imbrayde, or embrayde = upbraid. M.E. up-breiden, A.S. up-bregdan, to attack, accuse, &c., cognate with braid, to weave. Elyot, Gov. 16, has 'He was of his enemies embrayed, and called a schoole master.'

P. 105, l. 2. payntinges, i.e. painting the complexion with rouge. In all ages men have objected to this practice, as in all ages it has been practised by women. See Strutt's Manners and Customs, vol. iii. p. 103, and for much curious information Dibdin's Note, More, pp. 318-19, ed. Boston, 1878.

1. 6. honest conditions, honourable behaviour, respectful deference. Lat. 'morum probitas et reverentia.'

1. 7. loue is oftentimes wonne. So Crabbe of his Phoebe Dawson, 'Admirers soon of every age she gained, Her beauty won them and her worth retained.' Par. Reg. ii.

1. 17. may sturre and prouoke. Lat. has 'calcar et incitamentum sit,' i.e. may be a spur and an incitement. This was also suggested by a regulation of Lycurgus; see Plutarch, Instituta Laconica, xviii.

1. 22. hawte or ferefull = haughty or terrifying.

1. 23. vse themselfes, i.e. show, behave themselves. Lat. has exhibent, where there is an ellipse of se.

1. 27. cappe of maintenaunce. The 'cap of maintainance,' also called 'cap of dignity,' is a cap of crimson velvet lined with ermine with two points turned to the back. Originally worn by dukes only, it is carried in the hand before the sovereigns of Great Britain on the occasion of their coronation, whence in all probability its name. In the Latin text, diadema serves for all three head-dresses.

1. 31. Thei haue but few lawes. Tacitus remarks that it is in the corruptest states that there are most laws: 'Corruptissima repub. plurimae leges' (Annals, iii. 27); while he observes of Germany 'plus ibi boni mores valent quam alibi bonae leges' (Germania, xix).

II. 31-2. instructe and institute, i.e. instructed and trained. The original has institutis only.

1. 38. blinder and darker. Lat. has obscuriores, more obscure.

P. 106, l. 2. proctours and serjeauntes at the lawe. With the contempt which More here shows for lawyers and the technicalities of their profession compare the equally contemptuous expressions of Cicero, Pro Murena, xi and xii, and Rabelais, Pantagruel, bk. iii, ch. xxxix-xliv, and bk. v. xiv-xvi. See, too, Swift, whose contempt for lawyers equalled his contempt for soldiers, Gulliver's Travels, pt. ii. ch. vi (Scott's ed. vol. xii. p. 168). A proctor (Lat. procurator, one who acts for another) was a person who performed the duties of an attorney or solicitor in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts in England. Proctors were formerly a distinct body from solicitors, but the office is now merged in the latter class, any solicitor being allowed to practise in these Courts since 1877, at which time jurisdiction had already been taken from the clergy, and the Admiralty Court included in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice. The serjeant-at-law was formerly the highest degree of barrister, ranking next to the judge, and could only be appointed after sixteen years' standing. Moreover, he had exclusive audience in the Court of Common Pleas. He was appointed by a writ or patent of the crown. This distinction was entirely honorary, merely giving precedence over ordinary barristers. The order is now practically extinct, for, since 1868, no person except a Judge-Designate has taken the degree, though it has never been formally abolished. The Lat. has simply causidici, advocates, for both these titles.

1. 8. lesse circumstauence of wordes, i.e. circumlocution, Lat. minus ambagum.

chylndern, i.e. people. As often in the Bible.

Cf. Ps. cxliv. 7 'And deliver me ... from the hand of strange children.' Also 1 Pet. i. 14 'As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance.' So passim, 'the children of Israel.'

1. 25. grosse, i.e. the obvious, general. The original has crassa.

1. 30. blynde an interpretacion. For an excellent commentary on this see Cicero, pro Murena, xi, xii.

P. 107, l. 18. affection, i.e. bias, feeling, prejudice. Cf. Harrison, Exhort. to Scottes, 227 'Weigh the querell indifferently and without affection.'

auryce = avarice.

take place, i.e. have a place.

1. 19. breake, i.e. break down.

1. 27. neuer . . . none. Another instance of a double negative for emphasis.

1. 35. here in Europa. For what follows see the General Introduction. The bitter irony of this passage will be obvious. The direct references seem to be to the shameful treachery of the French and of Ferdinand against Frederick of Naples when Ferdinand joined with Louis XII in the Treaty of Grenada to portion out Naples between them in 1500; to the treachery of Julius II when in 1510 he deserted his allies the French, and formed a league with the Swiss, the Venetians, the Emperor and the Kings of Spain and England to expel the French from Italy; and to the circumstances which in 1514 broke up the Holy League. See Erasmus's commentaries on the Adagia 'Simulatio et Dissimulatio' and 'Imperitia.'

P. 108, l. 1. through the reverence, &c. The second edition reads 'at the reverence and motion of the head byshoppes.' The Latin reads 'sumorum reverentia metuque pontificum.' Robynson afterwards apparently read motuque.

l. 7. thynke well, i. e. rightly think.

l. 10. faythfull, holding the faith, i. e. Christianity.

l. 12. lyne equinoctiall, the equator.

l. 16. some cauillation founde in the woordes, i. e. some legal quibble as to the meaning of the words. To cavil, Lat. cavillari, is properly to 'mock' or 'jest,' hence to raise frivolous objections. For the substantive N. E. D. quotes Lydgate, Pylgr. Soule, iv. xxix 'Yf lawes be keped stably withoute any cauyllacions.'

l. 27. a shamefull death. Lat. has furca, the cross, i. e. crucifixion, this being the most ignominious death amongst the Romans.

euen verye they, i. e. even these very men. Lat. hi ipsi.

l. 31. aualeth it self, i. e. lowers itself. The word is directly from O.F. avaler, to descend, from the Lat. ad vallem, to the valley (speaking of rivers flowing down). Cf. 'Phœbus gan availl His weary waine.'—Spenser, Sheph. Cal., Jan. 73. The root is also found in 'avalanche.'

l. 34. by lowe = below. This was altered in the second edition to 'lowe by the' = near. The Lat. has humirepa for the whole phrase.

l. 36. because it shall not run at rouers, i. e. that it may not run wild. The Lat. has 'neve usquam septa transilire queat' = that it may nowhere be able to leap over the bounds. 'To shoot at rouers' is a term of archery meaning to shoot an arrow at random and not at any particular object or target. Cf. Drayton, Polyolbion, xxvi 'With broad arrow or prick, or roving shaft, At marks full fortie score

Q 2
they used to prick or sore,' and South's Sermons, 'Providence never shoots at rovers.'

P. 109, l. 4. so euyll keepers of, i.e. who so loosely observe.

l. 9. was verye euel begonne, i.e. it was a bad thing ever to have commenced them.

ll. 9-10. this causeth men. A reference to the ill-feeling between England and Scotland, particularly from the time when James IV allied himself with France to the results of the Battle of Flodden Field.

CHAPTER VIII

Of Warfare.

Dislike of the Utopians to war, and their method of conducting it. Their chief aim to minimize bloodshed.
Preference of stratagem to force. Immoral intrigues and practices to which they resort. Employment of mercenaries and the character of those mercenaries. How their battles are conducted and their camps fortified. Cost of the war imposed on the conquered.

With this chapter should be compared Erasmus's Pacis Querela and his commentary on 'Dulce bellum inexpertis,' Adagia, chil. iv. cent. iv. prov. 1. More's opinions on this subject were identical with those of his friends Erasmus and Colet, but they were shared also by the Anabaptists and afterwards by the Quakers.

P. 110, l. 1. beastelye, i.e. fit for beasts. Lat. 'rem plane beluinam.'

l. 6. glory gotten in warre. With More's abhorrence and contempt for war should be compared Swift's Gulliver's Travels, the remarks of the King of Brobdingnag, part ii.
ch. vii. The Anabaptists and Quakers have always held the same view. In modern poetry it is a distinct note. Cf.
Browning's Love among the Ruins; Tennyson's Locksley Hall; Whittier's Poems passim; and Longfellow, In the Arsenal at Springfield:—

'The warrior's name should be a name abhorred,
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead Should bear for ever more the curse of Cain.'
l. ii. to seke in the feat of armes, i.e. unaccustomed to the use of arms. 'To be to seke' = to be wanting in. Cf. 'Does he not also leave us wholly to seek in the art of political wagering?'—Swift, Tale of a Tub, v.

l. 12. goo to battayle. So Ed. 2; Ed. 1 inserts 'to' before 'goo.'

l. 19. not euer; i.e. not always.

l. 24. probable, i.e. able to be substantiated, a just one, exactly in the Latin sense. Cf. Milton, Civil Power in Eccles. Causes, 'He who maintains tradition not probable by Scripture'; and Jeremy Taylor, Holy Living, iv. 5 'a probable necessity.'

the contrarie parte, i.e. the other side.

ll. 29, 30. much more mortally, i.e. with much more rancour. Lat. multo infestius.

l. 30. frindes marchauntes, i.e. the merchants with whom their friends do business.

P. 111, l. 4. Nephelogetes. A very appropriate Utopian name, 'the people of Cloudland.' Νεφηλογηταί, a word coined by More and no doubt suggested by the Homeric νεφηληγηρέτα, which has of course quite a different meaning. From Gk. νεφήλη.

Alaopolitanes. The inhabitants of the 'City of Blind men.' From Gk. ἀλαός, blind, and πόλις, a city.

l. 13. shrewedely = severely. Cf. 'The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold,'—Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 4. 1. Also, 'I knew one shrewdly gor'd by a Bull,'—Dampier, Voyages, II. ii. 99.

l. 25. wiped, i.e. defrauded, cheated. Cf. 'We are but quit; you fool us of our moneys, In every cause, in every quiddit wipe us.'—Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 5. The expression is more common in Greek and Latin than in English. Cf. Greek διχομύσσεων and Lat. emungere. beside = out of. Cf. 'That no God was able to put him besides his Kingdom.'—Ussher, Ann. v. 88. N. E. D. quotes Fox, Acts and Mon. ii. 384 'He put the new Pope Alexander beside the cushion, and was made pope himself.'

l. 27. occupying. See Glossary.

l. 32. frindes marchauntes men. Those who are trading with their friends. The Lat. is amicorum negotiatores.

l. 33. leise = lose. There are four variants of the spelling of this word by Robynson.

P. 112, ll. 3, 4. nother in his liffe, nother in his liuinge, i.e. there is no loss of life nor livelihood. Lat. aut vita aut victu.

1. 19. sett vp a pyller. With this cf. Plutarch, Instituta Laconica, xxv: 'Whenever a victory was gained through a well-contrived stratagem, and thereby with little loss of men and blood, they always sacrificed an ox to Mars: but when the success was purely owing to their valour and prowess, they only offered up a cock to him; it being in their estimation more honourable for their generals and commanders to overcome their enemies by policy and subtlety than by mere strength and courage' (Goodwin's paraphrase of Plutarch's Morals, vol. i. pp. 94-5.

1. 22. cracke, i.e. brag. 'Crack' is primarily to make a sharp noise; hence, to utter or tell in a loud voice. We still use the word in 'crack a joke.' Then, as here, 'to talk big,' 'boast.' Cf. 'Thou art always cracking and boasting.'—Addison, Drummer, i. i. when. Lat. quoties, how often.

1. 26. puisance. Ed. i reads 'pusyaunce.'

1. 34. moued battayle, i.e. made war.

1. 37. aferde, i.e. afeard, afraid. Cf. 'Fye, my Lord, fie! A Souldier and afeard.'—Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. i. 41.

P. 113, l. 1. sette forewarde, i.e. further the interest of, help on. Cf. Prayer Book, 'In the Ember Weeks,' 'that...they may set forth thy glory, and set forward the salvation of all men.'

1. 5. denounced, i.e. proclaimed. Lat. indicto bello.

11. 5, 6. manye proclamations. The whole of this passage with all that follows is an exact account of the intrigues of Henry VIII and his minister Lord Dacre against Scotland. See Brewer, Letters and State Papers, vol. ii. pt. i. Introduction, p. cclxix. It may be added that this would be brought home to More, as the correspondence passed through Tunstal's hands when minister in the Netherlands.

1. 19. takinge their partes, i.e. if they will join them.

11. 22-3. they haue, i.e. their enemies, the reading of the second edition.

1. 29. So that, &c. There is no 'consequence' here. The original is 'Tam facile quodvis in facinus impellunt munera,' 'so easily do gifts drive men to any kind of deed.'

1. 30. enforce, i.e. force, impel. Cf. 'My serving you...Enforced this to come to pas' (Tusser, Husbandry (1878), 5).

1. 31. they kepe no measure, i.e. they fix no limits.

1. 33. endeuoure themselves, reflexive. See Glossary.
NOTES: BOOK II

P. 114, l. 4. amonge other people ys dysallowed, i.e. is not permitted by other people. Lat. 'apud alios improbatum.'

ll. 6-7, 36. as who = as those who.

l. 14. base = lower.

ll. 20-1. occasyons of debate and dyssentyon. The best commentary on this will be an extract from Lord Dacre's dispatch to the Lords of the Council dated August 1, 1515: 'Received their letter . . . directing him as of himself to practise with the Lord Chamberlain and other lords of Scotland to induce the sending of an embassy for peace, to foment quarrels between Albany and Angus, and between Albany and the Chamberlain, so as to drive the Duke out of Scotland' (Brewer, Letters & State Papers, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 205).

l. 33. intyerlye = entirely, i.e. singularly. The Lat. original is unice.

P. 115, l. 5. of = from. Lat. ex.

Zapoleteas. The people intended are the Swiss, and the word, as Dr. Lupton has pointed out, is plainly coined by More from the Greek, and means 'ready sellers' (of themselves), or 'readily sold.' ZapOleHTAI or zapowl7oi from Zap, the intensive, and πωλεῖν, to sell. More's character of the Swiss is amply corroborated by their conduct in the Italian wars. They first fought against their own countrymen on the side of Ludovico Sforza, when they simply sold themselves to the highest bidders. In 1500 they deserted Sforza and went over to the French. In 1513, entering the service of Leo X, they defeated the French at the battle of Novara. More gives them this prominence because, at the very time he was writing, Henry, through Pace, was bargaining for their assistance in the war against France, they 'being willing to assist him with 20,000 men at 40,000 florins a month' (Brewer, Letters and State Papers, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 264).

l. 7. hydeous. The Lat. is horridus, and probably simply means 'rough.'

l. 10. abide, i.e. endure. Cf. 'He could not abide an ass' (De Foe, 'Hist. Apparitions,' Works, xv. 370). The word in this sense is extremely rare in an affirmative sentence as we have it in the text, being almost invariably used with a negative or quasi-negative, e.g. 'I cannot abide,' 'He could scarcely abide,' &c.

ll. 10, 11. abhorrynyge from, i.e. shrinking from, Lat. abhorrere. Cf. Fynes Moryson, I. 3. i. 208 'Most part of the Mariners are Greekes, the Italians abhorring from being sea men.'

1. 15. breede = breeding.
1. 25. whomewyth they be in wayges, i.e. from whom they receive pay.

1. 31. lytle more moneye. For the greed of the Swiss, cf. Pace’s letter to Burbank (Brewer, Letters and Papers of Henry VIII, Preface, Iviii): ‘The Swiss be unreasonable in asking money, and remedy there is none, “quia talis est illorum barbaries ut pecuniam petitam neganti mortem minentur.”'

1. 32. there awaye, i.e. in those parts, an interpolation of Robynson’s.

1. 34. nye = nigh, i.e. near in relationship.
1. 37. separate = separated, Lat. distracti.

P. 116, l. 7. taken a smacke in, i.e. acquired a taste for.
1. 16. abuse, use ill.
1. 20. on liue = ‘alive,’ the reading of Ed. 2.
1. 31. ioyne to = join-to, i.e. add. Lat. ‘suos cives adiungunt.’

1. 33. conductyon, i.e. leadership, command. Cf. Holinsheds, Chron. ii. 221 ‘English horsemen under the conduction of the lord William Evers.’

1. 38. miscarry = fail, or be incapacitated. The original is ‘ex euentu.’ Cf. ‘Two ill-looking Ones, that I thought did plot how to make me miscarry in my journey’ (Bunyan, Pilg. Prog. i. 256).

P. 117, l. 10. be. Ed. 1 misprints ‘by.’
1. 13. so that = provided only that.
1. 14. dyspose them, i.e. set them out.
1. 15. maye not flye. The original is ‘non sit refugiendi locus,’ there may be no occasion for flight.

11. 16, 17. what for ... what for, see supra, 49, 19.

11. 22-3. women ... accompanye their husbandes. Suggested no doubt either by Plato, Republic, v. p. 457: ‘Then let the wives of our guardians strip, having virtue for their robe, and share in the spoils of war and the defence of their country’ (Jowett’s translation), or by Tacitus, German. xviii ‘ne se mulier extra virtutum cogitationes extrague bellorum casus putet, ipsis incipientis matrimoniis auspiciis admonetur venire se laborum periculorumque sociam, idem in pace, idem in praelio passuram ausuramque.’
1. 26. sett fylde, i.e. line of battle, battle array; Lat. in acie.

1. 29. alliaunce, i.e. kindred, Lat. cognati. Cf. 'Therefore let our Alliance be combin'd' (Shakespeare, Jul. Caes. iv. 1. 43).

P. 118, l. 7. bronte = shock, onslaught. See Glossary.

1. 10. gyue backe, i.e. retreat. Cf. 'So they (Fiends) gave back and came no further' (Bunyan, Pilg. Prog. i. p. 108).

1. 17. knowledge in cheualrye, i.e. practical knowledge of military discipline. Lat. militaris disciplinae peritia.

1. 18. putteth them in a good hope, i.e. gives them confidence.

1. 28. honestie = honour, exactly the Latin honestas.

1. 31. bende = band, modification of 'band.' bende is rare in this sense, from F. bande, Low Lat. banda, 'a gang,' after 1600 (N. E. D.).

1. 34. inuade = attack.

P. 119, l. 10. rerewarde, i.e. the rear guard. 'Rere' is short for M. E. arere, behind. 'Warde' is an O. F. form of garde. Cf. 'The God of Israel will be your rereward' (Isa. lii. 12).

1. 24. spyte of there tethes = in spite of their teeth, their direct opposition; i.e. despite all resistance. The phrase 'in the teeth' means 'in direct opposition to.' The Cent. Dict. quotes Urquhart's Rabelais, i. 49 'They met Picrochole in the teeth'; and Shakespeare, C. of E. ii. 2. 22 'Dost thou geer and flout me in the teeth?'

1. 37. policie, i.e. stratagem. Lat. stratagemate.

1. 38. softely = quietly. Lat. sensim.

P. 120, l. 8. in harneis, i.e. under arms. The Lat. is 'in armis,' and cf. the same phrase in l. 18, 'armati.' M. E. harness, O. F. harneis. Cf. Ital. arnese; it properly means 'tackle, gear.' It was afterwards applied to armour and particularly to a coat of mail, and in Elizabethan English is commonly so used. So Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5. 52 'At least we'll die with harness on our back.'

1. 9. auentures, i.e. events, surprises.

1. 19. afarre of, i.e. for long-distance fighting.

1. 22. mortall, i.e. death-dealing, deadly. Lat. letales.

1. 23. foynes, i.e. thrusts made with the point of the weapon thrust forward, as distinct from the strokes made with the edge of the weapon. Usually derived from O. F. foine, a three-pronged fish-spear. Lat. fuscina.

I. 30. handsome = handy, easy to manipulate. Cf. 'Neither were the barbarous huge targets, and long spikes so handsome among the trees and low shrubs as darts and swords.' Grenewey, Tacitus's Ann. ii. 4. 37.

P. 121, l. 3. espiall, i.e. a spy. This is an obsolete meaning of the word, which now means 'the action of espying.' For the former meaning cf. Holinshed, Chron. i. 174 'His (Harold's) vskillfull espials took the Normans for priests.'

Il. 18, 19. laye it vpon theirre neckes that be conquered, i.e. 'put it down to the conquered.' The Lat. has simply victis imputant.

Il. 26–7. vii. hundreth thousand ducates. This is probably the gold ducat, which was worth 9s. 4d., and was current in Holland, Sweden, Austria, and Russia, and not the Italian or silver coin worth about 3s. 6d. The total amount would therefore be about £326,500.

CHAPTER IX

OF THE RELIGYONS IN UTOPIA.

Of the various forms of religion in Utopia. Readiness with which many of the Utopians embraced Christianity. Their remarkable tolerance, and dislike of intolerance, inculcated by King Utopus; his reasons for such indulgence; his two restrictions on liberty of thought, and why they were imposed. Utopian belief in the immortality of the souls of brutes. Burial of the dead, and how it is conducted. Belief in the presence among the living of the souls of the dead; contempt for soothsaying and divination. Importance attached to the study of natural history, to manual labour, and to good exercises as a preparation for an after-life. Devout citizens divided into two sects; tenets and practices of these sects. The Utopian priests; their characteristic functions. Festivals of Churches and religious services in Utopia. Concluding reflections of Hythlodaye and More on the application of Utopian theories and practices to contemporary life.

P. 123, l. 5. Some worshipp. In this account of the forms of religion current in Utopia, More simply specifies the forms which religion has actually assumed among mankind, possibly drawing on the first book of Cicero's De Natura Deorum and the first book of Lactantius, De Falsa Religione, where those forms are enumerated. Cf. also Tacitus, Germania, ix.

ll. 5, 6. the sunne . . . the mone. Cf. Cicero, De Nat. Deorum, I. ii. 27 ‘Crotoniates Alcmaeon, qui soli et lunae reliquisque sideribus . . . divinitatem dedit.’ It was the religion of the primitive Germans (see Caesar, De Bello Gall. vi. 10) and of many other barbarous peoples.

l. 7. to a man. As Gaudama the Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster (Lupton).

l. 10. the moste. This pantheistic conception of Deity reminds us of the accounts given of the Pythagorean creed (Lactantius, De Falsa Religione (ed. 1685), i. p. 11) and of that of Zeno (Diogenes Laertius, Vita Zenonis, lx. 2); it is also the conception of Deity formulated by Cicero and constituting apparently his own creed. See Tusculanae Quaestiones, lib. i. 26. 66.

l. 18. Nother they, i.e. nor do they.

l. 25. Mythra. Mithras was the Persian Sun-God. See Strabo, xv. p. 732 (Casaub.) ‘The Persians . . . worship the sun, whom they call Mithras.’ As the Utopian language was ‘not unlike the Persian tongue,’ it is not unnatural that they should worship the same God. The worship of Mithra was attended with elaborate ritual observances and ceremonial mysteries, and spread far and wide, being also practised in Rome under the early Empire, especially in the army, for upwards of 300 years. There is proof of the presence of Mithraism in Britain, tablets being found in the Roman wall at York relating to it.

P. 124, l. 8. as he was mynded, i.e. while he was making up his mind. Lat. inter mutandae religionis consilia, thinking of a change of creed. The reminiscence here of St. Augustine’s De Civitate Dei is unmistakable. That work was written to refute the popular opinion that the fall of Rome had been the result of the wrath of the Pagan deities at the neglect of their worship through the substitution of Christianity for Paganism.

l. 12. reuenge, i.e. exact retribution for. Lat. vindicante.

l. 22. next vnto, i.e. nearest to; the second edition reads ‘nieghest.’ ‘That opinion’ is explained by what follows, namely, that Christ approved of communism.

l. 26. Christ instytutted. The original merely says ‘Christo placuisse,’ = that Christ approved.

l. 28. rightest Christian companies. The marginal note in the Latin, coenobia, seems to show that More meant monasteries.

l. 35. entered, i.e. initiated, Lat. initiati. Cf. Ellwood, Autobiography, 202 ‘He asked me if I would enter his Children in the Rudiments of the Latin Tongue’; and Shakespeare, Cor. i. 2. 2 ‘They of Rome are entred in our Counsailes.’

l. 37. minister, i.e. administer, confer. Cf. ‘Christ hath commanded prayers to be made, sacraments to be ministered, his Church to be carefully taught and guided’ (Hooker, Eccles. Pol. III. ii).

P. 125, l. 5. mynded to chuse one. It was this passage which suggested and gave point to what More relates in his letter to Peter Giles, namely, that a certain godly man was anxious to go out as a missionary to Utopia, hoping to be made bishop. (See Appendix.)

II. 9, 10. one of oure companye, i.e. of those who had been converted.

l. 12. with more earnest affection then wisdome, i.e. with greater zeal than prudence.

l. 21. not as a despyser, &c. This conception of religion purely in its political aspect is very remarkable in a man tempered like More. (See Introduction.) For the sentiment cf. Dryden, Religio Laici, 447-50:

‘... Private reason 'tis more just to curb Than by disputes the public peace disturb;
For points obscure are of small use to learn,
But common quiet is mankind's concern.’

l. 31. seuerall partes, i.e. different sides. As the country was thus split up by these religious factions Utopus found little difficulty in conquering it.

P. 126, l. 20. trewe. For the discrepancy of what is here inculcated with More's measures against the Protestants, see Introduction.

l. 24. trewthe of the owne powre. The original has 'ipsa per se ueriuis,' the mere force of truth by itself.

P. 127, l. 7. aualed, i.e. lowered, degraded, see Glossary. With the sentiment cf. Bacon’s Essay on Atheism: ‘They that deny a God destroy man's nobility ... as Atheism is in all respects hateful, so in this, that it depriveth human nature of the means to exalt itself above human frailty.'
ii. 8, 9. much lesse in the numbre of their citiziens, i.e. he is not even counted in the number of men, much less as one of their citizens.

l. 13. breake, the common lawes. For this idea that a man who is an atheist will have no regard for the law or for morality, cf. the freethinker Collins's reply, when he was asked why he was careful to make his servants go to Church: 'I do it that they may neither rob nor murder me'; and Tillotson's sermon on the Advantages of Religion to Societies (Works, vol. iii. 43 seqg.), both quoted in Pattison's Tendencies of Religious Thought in England, 1688–1750, reprinted from Essays and Reviews in Pattison’s Essays, Oxford, 1859, vol. ii.

l. 17. reiecte, i.e. rejected.

ll. 18, 19. of all sorte, i.e. by all classes; 'sort' is commonly used in old English for a number of persons, and for a particular class.

l. 21. punyashemente. This of course refers to physical punishment. The original has supplicium.

l. 22. beleue. The original has sentiat, i.e. be of such opinion.

l. 28. dispute in his opinion, i.e. discuss his opinion. and that onlye. The omission of these three words and the comma makes the meaning clear.

l. 29. elles a parte, i.e. otherwise. Lat. alioquin.

l. 37. liuinge. Ed. 1 misprints 'gluine.'

P. 128, l. 4. all they, i.e. they all.

l. 5. blesse, i.e. bliss. This spelling is very rare, though 'blisse' is common. It occurs, however, in Walkington, Opt. Glass, 65 'The soul is... wrapt up into an Elysium and paradise of blesse.'

l. 8. carfully, i.e. full of care, anxiously and reluctantly.

ll. forefeilynge = fore-feeling, presentiment.

l. 22. merely = merrily, cheerfully.

l. 24. ioyfull synging. Suggested perhaps by what Herodotus says (Hist. v. 4) of the Trausi: τὸν δ’ ἀπογυνόμενον παῖσοντες τε καὶ ἀδύμενοι γῆ κρύπτουσι, ἐπὶλέγοντες ὅσων κακῶν ἔξαπαλλαχθαίς ἐστὶν ἐν πάσῃ εὐδαιμονίᾳ (‘one that dies they bury in the earth, making merry and rejoicing, recounting the many evils from which being released he is now in perfect bliss’); or possibly Euripides (Fragments of the Cresphontes), where he says that, considering the evils of life, we ought rather to mourn those who enter life, τὸν δ’ αὖθανόντα καὶ πόνων πεπαυμένον, χαίροντας, εὐφημοῦντας, ἐκπέμπειν δόμων
'but him who is dead and hath ceased from his labours we ought with rejoicings and congratulations to escort from his home to the grave'). Cf. too Sir Thomas Browne, Religio Medici, part i. sect. xlii: 'The first day of our jubilee is death; the devil hath therefore failed of his desires: we are happier with death than we should have been without it.'

l. 33. their vertue, i.e. of the dead.

l. 38. feeble. This form is recognized in N. E. D. invisible. Ed. 1, 'invisibly.'

P. 129, l. 6. charitye. Ed. 2 reads 'amitie.' Lat. charitas.

ll. 9, 10. be presentlye conversaunte, i.e. are personally present among the living. The original is versari, 'to turn oneself about.' Hence 'to turn oneself about much in a place,' and so 'frequent.' There is no word corresponding to 'presentlye' in the Latin, but here it probably means 'in presence,' actually.' See also 'present conversacion' in l. 14; Lat. 'credita maiorum praesentia.' The beautiful superstition of which More here speaks was no doubt suggested by the Roman Lares and Manes. Cf. ll. 13-16, with the sentiment of Tennyson, In Memoriam, i.

l. 17. despise and mocke sothe sayinges, &c. The favourite butts of Euripides' scorn and contempt.

ll. 21-2. esteame and worshippe miracles. Cf. More's confutation of Tyndale, quoted in Tyndale's Works, 'Answer to More's Dialogue' (Parker Soc. ed., p. 100): 'I say that the Catholic Church bringeth miracles for their doctrine, as the Apostles did for theirs, in that God ceaseth no year to work miracles in his Catholic Church, many and wonderful, both for his holy men quick and dead.' And see chaps. iv-xvii of the First Book of the Dialogue.

l. 30. the prayse thereof cumminge, i.e. the praise given to God which is inspired by the contemplation of nature.

l. 33. nor...no. Double negative for emphasis. 'No' is changed to 'any' in ed. 2.

l. 34. of things, i.e. except religion.

l. 36. exercises, i.e. duties. Lat. officia. It is on the salutary effect of such 'exercises' as these that Ruskin lays so much stress; see Sesame and Lilies and Fors Clavigera, passim.

P. 130, l. 7. lothsumnes = loathsomeness.

fraye, i.e. frighten. Cf. 'Instead of fraying they them- selves did feare' (Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 40).
I. 13. seruiseable. Not in our sense of the word 'useful,' but 'as servants,' 'proffering their services.' The Latin has 'sese servos exhibent,' behave themselves as slaves. Cf. Milton, Ode on the Nativity, 244 'And all about the courtly stable, Bright-harness'd Angels sit, in order serviceable.'

II. 18, 19. flesh . . . beasts. Whilst the former (Lat. caro) would mean 'meat,' the latter (Lat. animal) would also include birds and fish.

l. 22. sweatynge, i.e. toiling, labouring. Cf. Cowley, Tree of Knowledge, st. 4 'Henceforth, said God, the wretched Sons of Earth shall sweat for Food in vain.'

l. 27. labour and toyle. Ed. 1 misprints 'tiole.'

P. 131, l. 1. worship them. After these words comes a sentence in the Latin which Robynson omits to translate: 'Nihil enim sollicitius observant, quam ne temere quicquam ulla de religione pronuncient' (translated by Burnet, 'There is nothing in which they are more cautious, than in giving their Opinion positively concerning any Sort of Religion').

l. 3. Buthrescas. From Gk. βου- (βοῦς, an ox), used in compounds for something 'very big,' 'huge,' as βουπας, 'a big boy,' βουλυμα, 'ravenous hunger' (cf. our 'horse' in 'horse-chestnut,' &c.); and θρησκος, 'religious,' 'devout.' So that it means 'extraordinarily religious.'

II. 5, 6. therefore very few. More's dislike of priests finds strange illustration in this remark.

l. 18. auoyding of strife. The first edition omits every-thing between 'a' in 'auoyding' and 'consecrate.'

l. 20. religions, i.e. religious ceremonies and services. Cf. Milton, Par. Lost, i. 372 'The invisible Glory of him that made them to transform Oft to the image of a brute adorn'd With gay religions full of pomp and gold.'

l. 23. dissolute. Both editions misprint 'dissolate.'

l. 28. sauynge that the priestes, &c. This is a Latin construction, and perhaps not quite clear in the English. We should say, 'except that the priests excommunicate those whom they find exceeding vicious livers from having any interest in divine matters.'

l. 32. runne in verye great infamy, i.e. incur very great disgrace; a not uncommon use of the word even now, as 'run in debt,' or 'run in danger.'

l. 35. approue, i.e. prove, demonstrate. Cf. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 5. 245 'One thing . . . which must approue thee honest.'

P. 132, l. 11. risinge of, i.e. arising from.
1. 12. women. It is remarkable that in his controversy with Tyndale there were no points more emphatically and intemperately denounced by More than Tyndale's vindication of women as ministers of religion and the contention that priests should be allowed to marry. See More's Confutation, bk. v, and Tyndale's Answer (Works, Parker Soc. ed., pp. 18, 29, 30, 98, 176). What More says about women in the text was perhaps suggested by Plutarch, Laconica, xxxv. The Lacedaemonians did not 'exclude either sex from their temples and religious services, but as they were always bred up to the same civil exercises so they were to the same common performances of their holy mysteries' (Plutarch, Morals, Goodwin's translation, vol. i. p. 97). Possibly More may have been thinking of Phoebe, who is described as a σύνυμπράτος in Epistle to the Romans, xvi. 1. Among the Collyridian heretics women were admitted to the priesthood. See Lecky, Hist. of European Morals, ii. 365.

1. 19. commen. As before, 'public.'
1. 22. after so singuler a sort, i.e. in so special a manner.
1. 37. runne in, &c. 'Incur,' as above.
P. 133, l. 3. mean, i.e. average, mediocre.
1. 4. thies priestes. In this picture of the conduct of the priests in Utopia we have another oblique satire on the part too often played by Christian priests both in mediaeval times and in More's own day. Instead of composing, they had too often inflamed war, as Henry the Fifth's bishops had done and such a Pope as Julius II. Wolsey had encouraged Henry VIII in his invasion of France, and More had just seen the Archbishop of St. Andrews and the bishops of Caithness and of the Isles abetting James IV in his ambitious designs, and falling at his side at the battle of Flodden Field.

1. 14. in to the mayne battayle, i.e. into the thick of the fight. Lat. acies = fighting-line.
1. 26. reculed, i.e. recoiled. Fr. reculer.
P. 134, l. 4. Cynemernes. 'Lynemernes' is the reading of the first English editions; probably a misprint. Dr. Lupton expresses his surprise that Robynson should have altered 'Cynemernos' into 'Lynemernos'; but he does not, at least in the editions I have consulted. Dr. Lupton's explanation (and I have no better one to give) is that the word is meant 'to suggest κυνημερόν [κυνός and ἡμέρα]. "the dog's day of the month," strictly the night between the old and the new,
when food was placed out at the crossways, and the barking of the dogs was taken as a sign of the approach of Hecate (see Theocritus, Idyll. ii. 35–6).

Trapemernes. This Dr. Lupton explains as τραπε-νερπνός, ‘the turning or closing day of the month’: from τρέπειν and ἡμέρα, through the adjective ἡμερινός.

1. 8. curious. In the Latin sense of ‘careful’ or ‘elaborate.’

1. 14. ouer much light. From the earliest times it was usual for churches to be brilliantly lighted. More’s suggestion that in an ideal church the light should be dim and subdued, because such subdued light was conducive to devotion, appears to be original. Possibly the idea may have been suggested to him by Euripides’ Bacchae, 485–6, where it is said that in religious rites darkness adds solemnity:—

Pentheus. τὰ δ’ ίρα νύκτωρ ἡ μεθ’ ἡμέραν τελείς;

Dionysus. νύκτωρ τὰ πολλά· σεμνότης’ ἔχει σκότος.

All readers will recall Milton’s ‘Storied windows richly dight, Casting a dim religious light’ (Il Penseroso, 159–60).

1. 23. indifferently, i.e. equally, alike, impartially. So till the eighteenth century. Cf. Steele, Tatler, No. 57 ‘All Mankind are indifferently liable to adverse strokes of Fortune.’

1. 24. sacrifice. As the Utopians had no sacrifices (see p. 136, l. 4), the Latin (sacrum) would be more correctly translated ‘rite.’

P. 135, l. 1. yet, i.e. still.

1. 20. knowe themselves to beare, &c. The parallel between this passage and the Rubric before the Communion Service in the Liturgy will be obvious: ‘The same order shall the Curate use with those betwixt whom he perceiveth malice and hatred to reign; not suffering them to be partakers of the Lord’s Table, until he know them to be reconciled.’

1. 26. the men goo, &c. The separation of the sexes in the Christian churches, Dr. Lupton observes, is as old as the Apostolical Constitutions.

1. 27. the women in both editions.

1. 30. goodman. The original has paterfamilias. Good wyfe, Lat. materfamilias. Words not yet wholly obsolete. Cf. Macaulay’s Horatius, st. lxx:—

‘When the goodman mends his armour,
And trims his helmet’s plume;
And the goodwife’s shuttle merrily
Goes flashing through the loom.’
1. 12. women. It is remarkable that in his controversy with Tyndale there were no points more emphatically and intemperately denounced by More than Tyndale's vindication of women as ministers of religion and the contention that priests should be allowed to marry. See More's Conflation, bk. v., and Tyndale's Answer (Works, Parker Soc. ed., pp. 18, 29, 30, 98, 176). What More says about women in the text was perhaps suggested by Plutarch, Laconica, xxxv. The Lacedaemonians did not 'exclude either sex from their temples and religious services, but as they were always bred up to the same civil exercises so they were to the same common performances of their holy mysteries' (Plutarch, Morals, Goodwin's translation, vol. i. p. 97). Possibly More may have been thinking of Phoebe, who is described as a δίκωνος in Epistle to the Romans, xvi. 1. Among the Collyridian heretics women were admitted to the priesthood. See Lecky, Hist. of European Morals, ii. 365.

1. 19. commen. As before, 'public.'
1. 22. after so singuler a sort, i.e. in so special a manner.

1. 37. runne in, &c. 'Incur,' as above.
P. 133, l. 3. mean, i.e. average, mediocre.

1. 4. thies priestes. In this picture of the conduct of the priests in Utopia we have another oblique satire on the part too often played by Christian priests both in mediaeval times and in More's own day. Instead of composing, they had too often inflamed war, as Henry the Fifth's bishops had done and such a Pope as Julius II. Wolsey had encouraged Henry VIII in his invasion of France, and More had just seen the Archbishop of St. Andrews and the bishops of Caithness and of the Isles abetting James IV in his ambitious designs, and falling at his side at the battle of Flodden Field.

1. 14. in to the mayne battayle, i.e. into the thick of the fight. Lat. acies = fighting-line.
1. 26. recoiled, i.e. recoiled. Fr. reculer.

P. 134, l. 4. Cynemernes. 'Lynemernes' is the reading of the first English editions; probably a misprint. Dr. Lupton expresses his surprise that Robynson should have altered 'Cynemernes' into 'Lynemernos'; but he does not, at least in the editions I have consulted. Dr. Lupton's explanation (and I have no better one to give) is that the word is meant 'to suggest κωνημερνός [κωνός and ημέρα], 'the dog's day of the month,' strictly the night between the old and the new,
when food was placed out at the crossways, and the barking of the dogs was taken as a sign of the approach of Hecate (see Theocritus, Idyll ii. 35–6).'

Trapemernes. This Dr. Lupton explains as τραπεζουρός, 'the turning or closing day of the month': from τρέπειν and ἡμέρα, through the adjective ἡμερινός.

1. 8. curious. In the Latin sense of 'careful' or 'elaborate.'

1. 14. ouer much light. From the earliest times it was usual for churches to be brilliantly lighted. More's suggestion that in an ideal church the light should be dim and subdued, because such subdued light was conducive to devotion, appears to be original. Possibly the idea may have been suggested to him by Euripides' Bacchae, 485–6, where it is said that in religious rites darkness adds solemnity:

_Pentheus._ τὰ δ' ἱπτὼρ ἤ μεθ' ἠμέραν τελεῖς;
_Dionysus._ νῖκτωρ τὰ πολλά' σεμνότητι ἔχει σκότος.

All readers will recall Milton's 'Storied windows richly dight, Casting a dim religious light' (Il Penseroso, 159–60).

1. 23. indifferently, i.e. equally, alike, impartially. So till the eighteenth century. Cf. Steele, Tatler, No. 57 'All Mankind are indifferently liable to adverse strokes of Fortune.'

1. 24. sacrifice. As the Utopians had no sacrifices (see p. 136, l. 4), the Latin (sacrum) would be more correctly translated 'rite.'

P. 135, l. 1. yet, i.e. still.

1. 20. knowe themselves to beare, &c. The parallel between this passage and the Rubric before the Communion Service in the Liturgy will be obvious: 'The same order shall the Curate use with those betwixt whom he perceiveth malice and hatred to reign; not suffering them to be partakers of the Lord's Table, until he know them to be reconciled.'

1. 26. the men goo, &c. The separation of the sexes in the Christian churches, Dr. Lupton observes, is as old as the Apostolical Constitutions.

1. 27. the women in both editions.

1. 30. goodman. The original has _paterfamilias_. Good _wyfe_, Lat. _materfamilias_. Words not yet wholly obsolete. Cf. Macaulay's Horatius, st. lxx:—

'When the goodman mends his armour,
And trims his helmet's plume;
And the goodwife's shuttle merrily
Goes flashing through the loom.'
P. 140, l. 1. presently, i.e. at the present time. Lat. in praesenti.

l. 3. kylleth them vp. ‘up’ = off. Cf. Shakespeare, As You Like It, ii. 1. 62 ‘To fright the animals and to kill them up, In their assign’d and native dwelling-place.’

l. 22. acquyteth, i.e. requiteth. Cf. Gower, Confess. Amant. (ed. Macaulay), bk. viii, ll. 2298-9 ‘This wold I for my laste word beseche, That thou mi love aquite as I deserve.’

l. 24. commen lawes. A reference to the Statute of Labourers passed in 1495-6, and again in 1514.

l. 31. by force of a law. The Statute of 1514.

P. 141, l. 17. rauine. From O.F. ravine, rabine (Lat. rapina), robbery, rapine, and so plunder. The original sense of the word is lost in French, where it now means ‘a violent rush of water’ (N. E. D.).

brabling, i.e. cavilling or wrangling. The derivation of the word is obscure. Cf. Raleigh, History of the World, i. 172 ‘The brabblings of the Aristotelians.’

l. 36. lady money. The Latin is simply beata illa pecunia, translated by Burnet ‘that blessed thing called money.’ Robynson was no doubt thinking of the phrase ‘lady Pecunia’ which became so common afterwards among the Elizabethans. See Barnfield’s Encomium of Lady Pecunia; and the ‘Queen’ or ‘Lady’ Pecunia in Ben Jonson’s Staple of News.

l. 37. a goddes name = in God’s name. Latin has scilicet. Cf. Chaucer, Prol. 854 ‘What, welcome be the cut, a Goddes name!’

P. 142, ll. 8, 9. oure sauioure Christe. This association of Christ with communism was one of the heresies of the Anabaptists, which makes More’s insistence on it the more remarkable. See Bullinger’s Letters (Parker Society ed.), vol. ii. 18, 21, iv. 18; and Hooper’s Works (Id.), vol. ii. p. 42. It is a heresy condemned in one of the articles, Liturgy, Edw. VI. 536. But see More’s repudiation, supra, p. 45 foll.

l. 13. not that one. Ed. 1, ‘No that one.’

l. 14. princesse. The first edition reads ‘prince.’ What More here says of ‘pride’ he says with equal emphasis in his ‘De Quatuor novissimis’ (English Works, 1577, pp. 82, 1270, referred to by Dr. Lupton). It is condemned not less strongly, and for the same reasons, by his contemporaries, by Warner, as Satan’s chief instrument for leading men astray, see Farr’s Select Poetry, p. 379; ‘as the headspring of all evil' by Becon, Works, i. 198; 'as the source of heresies' by Tyndale, Works, ii. 140.
NOTES: BOOK II

245

1. 18. by her good will, i.e. of her own will.
1. 23. hell hound. The original has auerni serpens, 'serpent of Avernus.'
1. 28. yet, i.e. at least. Lat. reads saltem.
1. 29. chaunced to, i.e. fallen to. Lat. contigisse.
1. 32. wealthely, happily, successfully. Lat. feliciter.
1. 37. ieopardye of domesticall dissention. Lat. 'nihil impendet periculi ne domestico dissidio laboretur,' i.e. no risk of party strife.

P. 143, l. 1. well fortesfied and strongly defenced wealth and riches of many cities. Robynson has once more paraphrased the Latin: 'quae una multarum urbium egregie munitas opes pessundedit.' For defenced, cf. A.V., Jer. i. 18 'I have made thee this day a defenced city.'

1. 25. other=others. Lat. quosdam. Cf. P.B. version (Coverdale's) of the Psalms, vii. 16 'He is fallen himself into the destruction that he made for other.'
1. 29. communication, i.e. conversation. See Glossary.
1. 33. ones=at some future time.
1. 35. els, Lat. aliaquin; i.e. but for Raphaell's love of fault-finding.
APPENDIX

I.

To the right honourable Hierome Buslyde, prouost of Arieñ, and counselloure to the catholike kinge Charles, Peter Gyles Citizien of Antwerpe, wisheth health and felicité.

Thomas More the singular ornamente of this our age, as you your self (right honourable Buslide) can witnesse, to whome he is perfectly wel knowen, sent vnto me this other day the ylande of Vtopia, to very few as yet knowen, but most worthy which, as farre excelling Platoes commen wealth, all people shoulde be willinge to know: specially of a man most eloquent so finely set furth, so conningly painted out, and so cuydently subject to the eye, that as oft as I reade it, me thinketh that I see somwhat more, then when I heard Raphael Hythloday himslef (for I was present at that talke aswell as master More) vtteryng and pronounc- ing his owne woordes: yea, though the same man, accordinge to his pure eloquence, did so open and declare the matter, that he might plainely enough appeare to reporte not thinges, which he had learned of others onelye by hearesay, but which he had with his own eyes presently sene, and throughly vewed, and wherein he had no smal time bene conversant and abiding: a man trulie, in mine opinion, as touching the knowledge of regions, peoples, and worldly experience, muche passinge, yea euen the very famous and renowned travailer Vlysses: and in dode suche a one, as for the space of these viij. c. yeres past I think nature into the worlde brought not furth his like: in comparison of whome Vespuce maye be thought to haue sene nothing.
Moreouer, wheras we be wont more effectually and pitthely to declare and expresse things that we haue sene, then whiche we haue but onelye hearde, there was besides that in this man a certen peculiar grace, and singular dexteritie to discrue and set furth a matter withall. Yet the selfe same things as ofte as I beholde and consider them drawn and painted oute with master Mores pensille, I am therwith so moved, so delited, so inflamed, and so rapt, that sometime me think I am presently conversaunt, even in the ylande of Vtopia. And I promise you, Ican skante beleue that Raphael himselfe by al that fīue yeres space that he was in Vtopia abiding, saw there somuch, as here in master Mores description is to be sene and perceaued. Whiche description with so manye wonders and miraculous things is replenished, that I stande in great doubt wherat first and chieflie to muse or manuella: whether at the excellencie of his perfect and suer memorie, which could welneigh worde by worde rehearse so manye things once onely heard: or elles at his singular prudence, who so well and wittyly marked and bare away al the originall causes and fountaynes (to the vulgar people commonly most vnknownen) whereof both yssueth and springeth the mortall confusion and vtter decaye of a commen wealth, and also the auauencement and wealthie state of the same may rieze and growe: or elles at the efficacie and pitthe of his woordes, which in so fine a latin stile, with suche force of eloquence hath couched together and comprised so many and diuers matters, speciallie beeing a man continuallie encombred with so manye busye and troublesome cares, both publique and priuate, as he is. Howbeit all these things cause you litle to maruell (righte honourable Buslid) for that you are familiarly and throughly acquainted with the notable, yea almost diuine witte of the man.

But nowe to procede to other matters, I suerly know nothing nedeful or requisite to be adiyned vtne his writinges. Onely a meter of .iiij. verses written in the Vtopian tongue, whiche after master Mores departure Hythloday by chaunce shewed me, that haue I caused to be added thereto, with the Alphabete of the same nation, and haue also garnished the margent of the boke with certen notes. For, as touchinge the situation of the ylande, that is to saye, in what parte of the worlde Vtopia standeth, the ignoraunce and lacke whereof not a litle troubleth and gresenth master More, in dede Raphael left not that vnspoken of. Howbeit with verie fewe wordes he lightly touched it, incidentlye by the way passing it ouer, as meanyng of likelihod to kepe and reserve that to an other place. And the same, I wot not how, by a certen euell and vnluckie chaunce escaped vs bothe. For when Raphael was speaking therof, one of master Mores seruantes came to him, and whispered in his eare. Wherefore I beyng then of purpose more earnestly addict to heare, one of the company, by reason of cold taken, I thinke, a shippeborde, coughed out so loude, that he toke from my hearinge certen of his wordes. But I wil neuer stynte, nor rest, vntil I haue gotte the full and exacte knowledge hereof: insomuchte that I will be hable perfectly to instructe you, not onely in the longitude or true meridian of the ylande, but also in the iust latitude therof, that is to say, in the sublenation or height of the pole in that region, if our frende Hythloday be in safetie, and alioe. For we heare very vnecerten newes of him. Some reporte, that he died in his iourney homewarde. Some agaynne affirmes, that he returned into his countrey; but partly, for that he coulde not away with the fashions of his countrey folk, and partly for that his minde and affection was altogether set and fixed vpon Vtopia, they say that he hathe taken his voyage thetherwarde agayne.

Now as touching this, that the name of this yland is nowhere founde amonge the olde and auncient cosmographers, this doubtte Hythloday himselfe verie well dissolued. For why, it is possible enouehe (quod he) that the name, whiche it had in olde time, was afterwarde chaunged, or elles that they neuer had knowledge of this iland: forasmuch as now in our time diuers landes be found, which to the olde Geographers were vnknownen. Howbeit, what nedeth it in this behalfe to fortifie the matter with argumentes, seynge master More is author hereof sufficient? But whereas he doubteth of the edition or imprinting of the booke, in deede herein I both commend, and also knowledge the mannes modestie. Howbeit vnto me it semeth a worke most vnworthie to be long suppressed, and most worthy to go abrod into the handes of men, yea, and vnder the title of youre name to be publyshed to the worlde: either because the singular endowementes and qualities of master More be to no man better knownen then to you, or els bicause no man is more fitte and meeete then you, with good counsellles to further and annaunce the commen wealth, wherin you haue many yeares already continued and travailed with great glory and commendation, both of wisedome and knowledge, and also of integritie and vprightnes. Thus o liberall supporter of good learninge, and floure of thisoure time, I byd you moste hartely well to fare. At Antwerpe 1516. the first daye of Novembe

II.

THOMAS MORE to PETER GILES
SENDETH GRETYNGE.

I am almoste ashamed, right welbeloued Peter Giles, to sende vnto you this boke of the utopian commen wealth, welnigh after a yeares space, which I am suer you loked for within a moneth and a halfe. And no marueil. For you knewe welenough, that I was already disbourdened of all the labour and study belonging to the inuention in this work, and that I had no nede at all to trouble my braynes about the disposition or conuevaunce of the matter; and therefore had herin nothing els to do, but only to rehearse those thinges, which you and I togethers hard maister Raphael tel and declare. Wherefore there was no cause whie I shold study to set forth the matter with eloquence; for asmuch as his talke cold not be fine and eloquent, being firste not studied for, but sodein and vnpremeditate, and then, as you know, of a man better sene in the greke language then in the latine tong. And my writing, the nigher
it shold approche to his homely, playne, and simple speche, somuch the nigher shold it go to the trueth; whiche is the only marke, wherunto I do and ought to direct all my trauail and study herin.

I graunt and confesse, frende Peter, meself discharged of somuch labour, hauing all thies thinges redy done to my hand, that almoost there was nothing lefte for me to do.
Elles other the inuention, or the disposition of this matter, might haue requyred of a witte, nother base nother at all vunlearned, bothe some time and leasure, and also some studye. But yf yt were requysyte and necessary, that the matter shoulde also haue bene wryten eloquentelye, and not alone truelye: of a suerty that thynge coulde I haue per-fourmed by no tyme nor studye. But nowe, seynge all thyes cares, stayes, and lettes were taken awaye, wherin elles somuche labour and studye shoulde haue bene employed; and that there remayned no other thynge for me to doo, but onelye to write playnye the matter as I hard it spoken; that in dede was a thynge lyghte and easye to be done. Howe beit, to the dyspatchyng of thys so lytell busynes my other cares and troubles did leaue almooste lesse then no leasure. Whyles I doo daylye bestowe my tyme abowte lawe matters; some to pleade, some to heare, some as an arbytratour wyth myne awarde to determyne, some as an vmpier or a judge with my sentence finallye to discusse; whiles I go one way to see and visite my frend, an other way about mine owne privat affaires; whiles I spend almost al the day abrode emonges other, and the residue at home amonge mine own; I leaue to meselfe,
I meane to my boke, no time.

For when I am come home, I muste commen with my wife, chatte with my chyldren, and talke wyth my seruauntes. All the whyche thynge I reken and accompte emonge busynes, forasmuche as they muste of necessyte be done:
and done muste they nedes be, oneles a man wyll be a straunger in hys owne howse. And in any wyse a man muste so fassyon and order hys condytyons, and so appoynte and dyspose hym selfe, that he be merye, iocunde, and pleas-aunte amonge them, whome eyther nature hath prouyded, or chaunce hathe made, or he hymselfe hathe chosen, to be the fellowes and companyons of hys lyfe: so that wyth to muche gentle behauyoure and famylyaryte he doo not marre them, and, by tomuche sufferraunce, of hys seruauntes make them hys maysters. Emonge thyes thinges nowe rehearsed stealethe awaye the daye, the moneth, the yeare. When doo I wryte, then? And all thys whyle haue I spoken no woorde of slepe, nother yet of meate, whyche emonge a greate number doth waste no lesse tyme then dothe slepe, wherin almooste halfe the lyfe tyme of man crepethe awaye. I therefore doo wynne and gette onelye that tyme, whyche
I steale from slepe and meate. Whyche tyme bycause yt ys verye littell, and yet somwhat it is, therfore haue I ones at the last, thoughe it be longe first, finished Vtopia, and haue sent it to you, frende Peter, to reade and peruse; to the intent that if anye thynge haue escaped me, you might putte me in remembrance of it. For though in this behalfe
I do not greatly mistruste meself (wichhe woulde God
I were somewhat in witte and learnyng, as I am not all of the worste and dullest memory), yet have I not so great truste and confidence in it, that I thinke nothing could fall out of my mynde.

For John Clement my boye, who as yow knowe was there present with vs, whome I suffer to be awaye from no talke, wherein may be anye profit or goodnes (for out of this yong bladed and newe shotte vp corne, whiche hath alredy begonne to spryngge vp bothe in Latine and Greke learnynge, I looke for plentiful increase at length of goodly rype grayne), he, I saye, hath brought me into a greate doubte. For wheras Hythlodaye (oneles my memory fayle me) sayde that the bridge of Amaurote, which goeth over the riuer of Anyder, is fyue hundreth paseis, that is to saye, half a myle, in lengthe; my Jhon sayeth that ii. hundred of those paseis must be plucked awaye; for that the ryuer conteyneth there not aboue thre hundreth paseis in bredthe. I praye yow hartely call the matter to youre remembranunce. For if you agree with hym, I also wyll saye as you saye, and confesse me selfe deceaued. But if you cannot remember the thynge, then suerly I wyl write as I haue done, and as myne owne remembranunce serueth me. For as I will take good hede that there be in my booke nothyng false, so, if there be anythynge in doubte, I wyll rather tell a lye then make a lye; because I had be good then wise rather.

Howbeit this matter maye easely be remedied, if yow wyll take the paynes to aske the question of Raphaell himselfe, by worde of mouthe, if he be nowe with yow, or els by youre letters. Which you must nedes do for an other doubte also, whiche hath chaunced, throughhe whoes faulte I cannot tell, whether throughhe myne or yourse or Raphaelles. For neither we remembred to enquire of hym, nor he to tell vs, in what parte of that newe worlde Vtopia is situate. The whiche thinge I had rather haue spent no small somme of money then that it should thus haue escaped vs; aswell for that I am ashamed to be ignoraunt in what sea that Ilande standeth, wherof I write so longe a trye, as also because there be with vs certayne men, and especially one deuoute and godly man, and a professour of diuinitie, who is excedyng desierous to go vnto Vtopia; not for a vayne and curious desiere to see newes, but to the intent he maye further and increase our religion, whiche is there already luckily begoune. And that he may the better accomplishe and perfourme this his good intent, he is mynded to procure that he maye be sent thether of the byshoppe, yea and that he hymselfe maye be made bishop of Vtopia; beynge nothyngge scrupulous herein, that he must obteyne this byshopricke with suete. For he counteth that a godley suete, whiche procedeth not of the desiere of honour or lucre, but only of a godly zeale.
APPENDIX II 253

Wherfore I moste earnestly desyere you, frende Peter, to talke with Hythlodaye, if you can, face to face, or els to wryte youre letters to hym; and so to worke in this matter, that in this my booke there maye neyther any thynge be founde whiche is vntrue, neither any thinge be lacking whiche is true. And I thinke verely it shalbe well done that you shewe vnto hym the booke it selfe. For if I haue myssed or fayled in any poynte, or if any faulte haue escaped me, no man can so well correcte and amende it, as he can: and yet that can he not do, onely he peruse and reade over my booke written. Moreover by this meanes shal you perceau, whether he be well wylyngge and contente that I should vndertake to put thys worke in wryting. For if he be mynded to publyshe and put forth his owne labours and trauayles hymselfe, perchaunce he woulde be lothe, and so would I also, that in publyshyngge the Vtopiane weale publyque, I should preuente and take from hym the flower and grace of the noueltie of this his historie.

Howbeit, to saye the verie truth, I am not yet fully determined with me selue, whether I wyll put forth my booke or no. For the natures of men be so divers, the phantasies of some so wayewarde, theire myndes so vnkynde, theire iudgementes so corrupte, that they which leade a merie and a iocunde lyfe, followinge theire owne sensuall pleasures and carnal lustes, maye seame to be in a muche better state or case, then they that vxe and vnquiete themselfes with cares and studie for the puttynge forth and publyshyngge of some thynge, that maye be either profett or pleasure to other; whiche neuertheles wyl disdaynfully, scornfully, and vnkyndly accepte the same. The moste parte of al be vnlearned: and a great numbre hath learnynge in contempte. The rude and barbarous alloweth nothyngge but that which is verie barbarous in dede. If it be one that hath a lytell smacke of learnynge, he reiecteth as homely and commen ware whatsoeuer is not stuffed full of olde moughteaten wordes, and that be wrene out of vs. Some there be that haue pleasure onely in olde rustie antiquities; and some onely in their owne doinges. One is so sowre, so crabbed, and so vnpleasaunt, that he can awaye with no myrthe nor sporte. An other is so narrow in the sholders, that he can beare no iestes nor tawntes. Some selie poore soules be so aferd that at eueri snappyshe worde their nose shalbe bitten of, that they stande in no lesse drede of euerye quicke and sharpe worde, then he that is bytten of a madde dogge feareth water. Some be so mutable and waueryng, that euery houre they be in a newe mynde, sainge one thynge syttyng, and another thynge standyng. An other sorte sytteth upon theire allebencheis, and there amonge theire cuppes they geue iudgement of the wittes of wryters, and with greate aucthoriteitie they condemn euen as pleaseth them euery wyryter accordyng to his writinge; in moste spiteful maner mockynge, lowtynge, and flowtynge them: beynge themselfes in the meane season sauffe, and, as sayth the proverbe, out of all daunger of gonneshotte. For whye, they be so smugge and smoethe, that they haue not so much as one heare of an honest man, whereby one may take holde of them. There be moreouer some so vnkynde and vngentell, that thoughe they take great pleasure and delectation in the worke, yet for al that they can not fynde in theire hartes to loue the author therof, nor to asorde hym a good worde; beynge muche lyke vncourteis, vnthankefull, and chourlishe guestes, whiche, when they haue with good and deyntie meates well filled theire bellyes, departe home, geuynge no thankes to the feaste maker. Go your wayes, nowe, and make a costly feaste at your owne chargeis for guestes so deyntie mouthed, so dyuers in taste, and bisydes that of so vnkynde and vnthankefull natures.

But neuertheles, frende Peter, do I praye you with Hythlodaye as I willed you before. And as for this matter, I shalbe at my lybertie afterwaordes to take newe aduisement. Howebeit, seyng I haue taken great paynes and laboure in wrytyng the matter, if it may stande with hys mynde and pleasure, I wyll, as touchinge the edition or publishing of the booke, followe the counsell and aduise of my frendes, and specially yours. Thus fare you well, ryght hertely beloued frende Peter, with youre gentell wyfe; and loue me as you haue euer done; for I loue you better then euier I dyd.

( ... )
GLOSSARIAL INDEX

PRINCIPAL CONTRACTIONS.

Proper names invented by More (or Robynson) are distinguished by *.

A

A, a. one, 20. 34. OE. ān, numeral and article; ME. ān, ān, a.
A, prep. in, on. A Goddes name, in God’s name, 19. 14, 141. 37. A beggyngge, on begging, 18. 13. OE. on, prep.; ME. on, o, a.
Abhor from, v. dislike, shrink from, 115. 10. L. ab, from; horrēre, to dread.
Abrode, adv. abroad, 17. 34. OE. on, prep. + brād, a. broad.
Abunde, v. abound, 142. 4. ME. abounden, abounden; L. abundāre, to overflow, ab, from, away + unda, wave.
Accorded, ppl. a. come to an agreement, 109. 16. OF. accorder, to agree; late L. accurāre, from cor, cordis, heart.
*Achoriens, the, 33. 8, 9.
Acquyte, v. requite, 140. 22. Late L. acquitāre, to appease, satisfy.
*Ademus, 63. 32.
Aduance, auance, v. exalt, 79. 20, 105. 5, 132. 27. OF. avancer; late L. abanteare (ab, away, ante, before), to go forward; d inserted from mistaken derivation from L. prefix ad.
Aduancemente, sb. furtherance, advancement, 103. 31. Aduentures, auentures, sb.; at al a., 56. 3, 127. 2, haphazard, at random. OF. aventure, a chance occurrence. Also with a changed to ad after L. adventura.
GLOSSARIAL INDEX

Aduourney, sb. adultery, 104. 14. OF. aventure, with ad- for a- after L. adulterium.
Aduoyded, v. avoided, shunned, 102. 15. For Avoid, OF. esvuidier, from es, (L. ex, out) and vuidier, to empty; ad- for a-, as in prec.
Aferd, aferde, ppl. a. afraid, frightened, 22. 13, 128. 12, 135. 19, 143. 25. OE. a, intensive prefix, + past part. of ferae, to frighten. Cf. dialectal afeared.
Affectioned, ppl. a. disposed, inclined, 129. 32. From Affection, v. F. affectionner; from L. affectio (-onem), disposition.
Affiance, sb. confidence, reliance, 129. 13. OF. aissance, cf. after, to trust; L. ad + fidere.
Aglette, sb. hanging ornament, pendant, properly a tag, 79. 11. OF. aiguillet, dim. of aiguille, needle, late L. acicula, for acicula, dim. of acus, needle.
A goo, adv. ago, 81. 33. Past part. of OE. agan, to go away; ME. agin.
Agreable (to), a. in keeping with, consonant with, 77. 18. OF. agréable, from à gré, favourably; L. ad gratiam, nent. of gratum, pleasant.
Allow, a lowe, v. praise, approve, sanction, 22. 38, 31. 12, 39. 20, 95. 22. OF. allower; L. allaudare, to praise. Cf. allow from L. allôcre, to assign, allow.
All togethers, adv. altogether, 123. 21. OE. tôgêdre, together, with intensive prefix all-, and adv. suffix -s, as if an adv. Gen.
Allyaunte, ppl. a. allied, akin, 96. 7. Pres. part. of ally; L. ad + ligâre, to bind.
* Amaurote, city of, 50. 14, 53. 8, 13, 74. 24.
* Amaurotians, 54. 18.
Ambre, sb. amber, 56. 19. Oyle or ambre, probably for ‘oil of amber’ obtained by distillation of the resin. F. ambre; Arab. anbar, amber-gris, extended by confusion to the yellow amber.
Amerîke, see Vespucci.
Amities, sb. friendships, i.e. favourable conjunctions, 82. 31 (with reference to the relative positions of the planets). F. amitiie; late L. amicitas, friendship.
A monge, amonges, prep. among, amongst, 5, 8, 44. 12. OE. on gemonge, in the throng, shortened to on-monge, amonge, and used as a prep. Also with adv. Gen. -s, corrupted later to -st, cf. against.
An, conj. and, 33. 14, 125. 16. Weakened form of And.
* Anemolians, 78. 22, 33.
Angerlye, adv. angrily, 87. 27. ME. angerlich, a. or adv.; ON. angriGr from angr, grief, anger. Mod. Eng. remodelled on Angry.
Antwerp, 2. 12, 16.
Anyder, river, 53. 17, 20, 54. 16.
Appayre, v. to injure, weaken, impair, 13. 25, 91. 38. OF. em-, am-peyveir; L. pejorare, to make worse; ME. am-, an-, ap-payren.
Applye, v. ply, practise, 60. 15. OF. aplier; L. applicare, to apply to.
Appoynt, v. plan, arrange, 54. 35. OF. apointer; late L. appunctare, to prick, mark with a point.
Aragon, King of, 32. 10.
Archedolte, sb. arch-dullard, chief of fools, 14. 21. ME. dolte, related to OE. dol, dull.
Aristophanes, 96. 28.
Aristotle, 96. 17.
Artyfycers, sb. handycraftsmen, 60. 22.
Asmuche as, conj. so much as, 26. 5. OE. eallsuā . . . eallsuā; ME. else . . . else, as . . . as, often combined with OE. suā, ME. so.
Assay, v. try, practise, 97. 36. OF. essai, assai, a trial; L. exagium, trial of weight.
Assentacion, sb. assenting, agreeing, 9. 37. L. assentatio (-onem), from assentāri, to assent.
Aswell, adv. as much, in a like degree, 46. 9.
Attayntede, pl. a. convicted, found guilty, 23. 15, sixteenth-cent. form for older Attaint. OF. ainteint, from atteindre, to accuse, convict; L. attingere, to hit.
Auale, v. lower, debase, 108. 31, 127. 7. OF. avaler, to let descend, from aval, down; L. ad + vallem, to the valley.
Auance, v. 105. 5, 132. 27. See Aduance.
Auance, auuance, v. boast, vaunt oneself, 19. 9, 108. 28. A contamination of avaut, OF. avant (late L. vānitāre, to boast) with auance, OF. avancer. See Aduance.
Auaunte, v. boast, vaunt, 112. 16. See Auance.
Auentures, sb. chances, hazards, 120. 9, 127. 2. See Adventures.
Auncetours, sb. ancestors, progenitors, 10. 17, 87. 37, 88. 2, 105. 17. OF. ancestre; L. antecessor, a foregoer, predecessor; ME. ancetre, aunceter, dialectal anceter, anster; remodelled in sixteenth cent. on F. auncestre + L. suffix -or.
Auncyetnes, sb. Error for Auncyentnes, ancientness, antiquity, 46. 15. From Ancient, OF. ancien; L. antiānus.
Aunswere to, v. answer meet, rebut, 19. 34. OE. andswarian with Dat.; hence in ME. with to; Cf. F. répondre à.
Aunters. See In aunters.
Auouters, sb. adulterers, 103. ii. See Aduoutrye.
Avaleth, v. 108. 31. See Auale.
Avayleable, a. available, serviceable, 15. 25. From Avail, v. new formation for vail, F. valoir, to be worth; L. valēre.
A-worke, 17. 5. On work, i.e. to work. A weakened form of On.
Ayer, sb. variant of Air, 94. 35, 36. OF. air; L. äer.

Bandes, sb. bonds, fetters, 99. 17. Same word as Bond; both from Icel. band.
Bankettes, sb. banquets, 72. 15. 47. 34. OE. ðæðencan, call to mind, used reflexively.

OF. banquet, feast, dim. of banc, from G. bank, bench.

*Barrance, 63. 31. Bewray, v. betray, expose, 22.

Be, prep by, 38. 6, 16, 84. 1. 7. OE. bi + wrēgan, to accuse, denounced.

Weak form of By. OE. bi.

Be it, v. imper. let it be so, 47. 25.

Bicause, bycause that, conj. Bicause, bycause that, by reason that, 40.

Be to seke. Be to be sought i.e. be wanting, 110. 10.

Bethinkynge Bente, because, by reason that, 40.

Behalfe, Behalfe, Bend, 15. 19, 58. 16, 64. 3. ME. bi (be, by), prep., cause, sb., L. causa.

Bende, Beggerlye, Beggarly, Bend, 15. 19, 60. 1. Past part. of Bend; OE. bendan.

Beggar, Beggarly, Bend, 15. 19, 60. 1. Past part. of Bend; OE. bendan.

Blackheath, defeat of Cornish rebels at, (1547), 10. 33, 12. 32.

Beastelye, a. bestial, pertaining to beasts, 110. 2. OF. butterknife; L. bestia; ME. suffix -lich, -ly.

Besse, sb. bliss, joy, 128. 5. Bonden men, sb. bondsmen, serfs, 50. 35. For Bond-men, representing OE. bōnda, bondsmen. Bonds wrongly regarded as a strong past part. in -en.

Beareth all the stroke, 43. 10, all the swing, 62. 24; has the chief power, is reckoned as the most important thing. Cf. To have the blow or swing, to have the power.

Beastelye, adv. in beggarly fashion, 43. 20. From Beggar, OF. begard; late L. begardus, one of the order of lay mendicants.

Beak, sb. gesture, sign, 29. 35. From Beck; v. shortened form of Becken, from OE. bēacn, sb. sign.

Beggerlye, adv. in beggarly fashion, 43. 20. From Beggar, OF. begard; late L. begardus, one of the order of lay mendicants.

Behalfe, in thys. On, in behalf of this, 25. 9. A confusion of two constructions; on his halve, and bi halve him, on, by his side.

Behate, v. hate, dislike, 37. 26. OE. hātian, to hate, made transitive by prefix be-Bende, sb. band, troop, 118. 31. From confusion of Band, OF. bande, a company, with Band, Icel. band, bond, fetter; and further with Bend, OE. bende, bond.

Bente, ppl. a. inclined, prone, 60. 1. Past part. of Bend; OE. bendan.

Bethinkynge hymselfe, v. refl. reflecting, calling to mind, | Bouches, sb. brooch, trinket, properly a pin, 78. 17. OF. broche, spit; late L. brocca, pointed stick. | Eng. agent suffixes -er, -e (OE. -ere, -a). |
| Burgundy, 31. 32. * Buthrescas, 131. 3. | Castile, King of, 1. 9, 32. 14. |
| By and by, adv. straightway, 57. 26. OE. bi, prep. by, hence close at hand, at once; cf. similar change to future time in presently. | Caulliation, sb. quibble, objection, 108. 16. OF. cavillacion; L. cavillari, to wrangle, object. |
| Bycause that, conj. 40. 19, 53. 16. See Bcause. | Cautell, sb. precaution, device, 93. 36. OF. cautele, cunning; L. cautela. |
| Bye, v. buy, purchase, 17. 34, 18. 36, 112. 15. OE. bycgan, to buy; ME. buyen. | Celenes (Celaenos), 7. 4. |
| By lowe, adv. below, 108. 34. OE. bi, by; Icel. lág, low. | Chaffare, chaffayre, sb. trade, traffic, 5. 38, 39. 8. OE. céap, bargain, faru, dealing; ME. chapfare, chaffare. |
| By lyke, adv. belike, probably, 19. 38. By, prep. +like, a. or sb. | Chardge, sb. expense, 64. 8, 14. OF. charge, burden; late L. carricum, load (of a car). |
| Cannellis, sb. channels, 54. 24. OF. chenal, canal; L. canális, a channel. Northern pl. -is. | Chastyce, v. chastise, correct, 24. 15, for older Chasty; L. castigare. |
| Cappe of maintenaunce, 105. 27. See Note. | Chaunce, v. to come by chance, to happen (to come) into, 42. 28. From Chaunce, sb.; late L. cadentia. |
| Careful, a. full of care, anxious, 92. 35. OE. caru, anxiety; sorrow. | Chaungeoable colours, 79. 5, 136. 17, changing or shot colours. Cf. Shakesp. Twelfth Night, ii. 4. 76 'Changeable taflleta.' |
| Carfully, adv. sorrowfully, 128. 8. | Cherisssing, sb. care, tending, 45. 8. From pres. part. of F. chérir, to cherish; from F. cher, L. carus, dear. |
| Carke, v. to be anxious, to trouble, 85. 23. North. F. carkier; late L. carricáre, to load. | Chesse, sb. the game of chess, 61. 20. OF. esches, pl. of eschec, check; from Persian shah, king. |
| Carpente, sb. carpenter, 59. 16. AF. suffix -er confused with | Cheualry, sb. military art, knightly exercises, 9. 25, 138. 15, 143. 12. OF. chevalerie; | from L. caballarius, horseman.

Cheuse, chewse, chuse, v. choose. Variant spellings of Chuse, OE. cōsān, ME. chōsen, chosan, chusen.

Christen, a. Christian, 41. 31. OE. cristen.

Church, our Lady's, at Antwerp, 3. 2.

Cicero, 3. 37.

Circumstaunce, sb. circumsotiency of detail, circumlocation, 106. 8. (Without indef. art., cf. 'To use great circumstance of wordes, to goe aboute the bushe.' Baret's Alvearie, 1580.) L. circumstantia, standing round, environment.

Circumuertion, sb. Error for Circumuention, overreaching, malicious device or stratagem, 106. 13. L. circumvenire, to encompass, 'get round.'

Cleane, a. pure, unadulterated, 52. 8. Cleane contrarye, 29. 25, 40. 34, the very opposite. OE. clāne, clear, pure.

Cloke, sb. cloak, covering, 74. 11. Late L. cloca, a bell, also a bell-shaped cape.

Coliars, sb. colliers, 140. 14. OE. col, coal, with Romanic suffix -ier.

Come to their handes, fall to their lot, reach them, 117. 35.

Commen, a. public, general, 23. 36. Common boxe, 75. 26, public chest. L. communis.

Commeth in, v. contracts, draws together, 48. 15.

Commoditie, sb. comfort, convenience, 8. 22, 56. 19, 63. 37, 71. 34, 140. 36. L. commoditas, from commodus, fit, suitable.

Commodye, sb. comedy, 40. 3. L. cómēdia.

Common boxe. See Commen.

Communicate, ppl. a. communicated, granted, 132. 35. L. communicātus, past part. of communicāre.

Communycatyon, sb. speech, converse, 2. 33; conversation, personal intercourse, 11. 8, 72. 1; discourse, 143. 29. L. communicatio (-onem), action of communicating.

Concelour, sb. concealer, hider, 26. 10. AF. concelour, from concealer, to conceal.

Conceytes, sb. skilfully or fantastically devised dishes, 72. 15. From Conceive, OF. concevoir; cf. deceit from deceived.

Condition, -dytyon, sb. conduct, behaviour, 25. 21, 105. 6. L. condicio (-onem), compact, also situation, nature, manner.

Conductyon, sb. conduct, management, 116. 33. From L. conductus, past part. of conducere, to lead.

Conscience, sb. consciousness, 86. 12, 92. 24. According to conscience, i.e. just, 75. 31. L. conscientia.

Consecrate, ppl. a. consecrated, 131. 19, 132. 23. L. consecrātus, past part. of consecrāre (con + sacrāre).

Constitucions, sb. decree, ordinance, 21. 4, 14. L. constitutio (-énem), that which is constituted or established.
Constitute, ppl. a. constituted, established, 85. 36. L. constitutus, past part. of constituere, to make to stand together.
Conuersion, sb. intercourse, 66. 2. Late L. conversátió-nem;
from conversari, to live with.
Coytes, sb. quoits, 18. 28. ME.
coit, quoite.
Cracke, v. brag, boast, 15. 4, 112. 22. OE. crachian, to make a cracking noise.
Crassus, 36. 22.
Credence, sb. belief, 75. 21.
L. crédentia (crêdo, I believe).
Cummeth of, v. proceeds from,
is caused by, 55. 20.
Cunynge, a. wise, knowing, 69. 22. Pres. part. of ME.
cunnen, to know; OE. cunnan.
Cure, v. care for, tend, 69. 8.
L. cūrāre, to care for, from cūra, care.
Curtage, sb. 14. 2, 80. 18. See Courage.
Customable, customablye, adv.
customarily, usually, 4. 16,
36. 51. 16. From Custom, sb.,
OF. coutume, from shortened form of L. consuetudo, custom.
Cyule philosophy, 39. 35.
That which is adapted to the public life of the community, politic. L. civilis, belonging to citizens.

D

Damned, ppl. a. condemned, sentenced, 24. 9. L. damnäre, to condemn.
Dasell, v. dazzle, 79. 3. Earlier form of Dazzle, a frequentative and dim. of Daze; ME.
dasen, of Norse origin.
Daunger, sb. jurisdiction, power, 21. 16, 81. 14. In her daunger, 94. 18, in her power. OF. dangier; late L.
*dominárium from dominium, lordship.
Decrey, v. decree, appoint, 25.
2, from Decree, sb.: see next.
Decrye, sb. decree, 125. 34,
126. ii. ME. variant of Decre, decrey; L. decretum, the thing decreed.

Dedicate, ppl. a. dedicated, 132. 22. L. deditactus, past part. of dedicare, to devote.

Defenced, ppl. a, defended, protected, fortified, 49. 19, 143. i. From L. defendens, past part. of defendere, to defend.

Delectacion, -ation, sb. delight, pleasure, 11. 15, 87. 4. L. delectatio (-ōnem), action of delighting.

Delete, sb. delight, pleasure, 51. 19. Variant of Delite.

Delite, yte, sb. delight, pleasure, 9. 24, 11. 9, 136. 5. From the verb. See Delyte, v.

Delyte, sb. delight, 33. 29. The c was apparently after L. delectare: see next.

Delyte, v. refl. to take pleasure, gratify oneself, 7. 35. ME. deliten, OF. deliter, L. delectare, to delight. Misspelt delight in Mod. Eng.

Denounce, v. to declare, proclaim war, 113. 5. OF. denoncer; L. dēnuntiāre, to declare.

Deryue, v. obtain, 54. 23. L. dērīvāre, to drain off water.

Descriue, v. discover, 22. 10, 25. 35. Properly Descry. From ME. confusion of OF. descriver, to publish, with descriere to describe.

Deuise, v. say, imagine, 45. 34, 46. 14. OF. deviser; late L. *dēvisāre, to divide.

Deuyse, sb. device, purpose, plan, 58. 11. Late L. divīsum, a division, also a device; from dividere, to divide.

Differyd, v. deferred, post-Dowt, v. doubt, 22. 18; fear, 188. 34. OF. douter. Changed to doubt after L. dubitāre.

Dreuell, sb. menial, drudge, 81. 9. Cf. MDu. dreevel, scullion, turnspit.

Drydynge, pres. part. dreading, 189. 6. ME. drēden; OE. drēdan, to dread.

Dysanulled, v. abolished, 83. 37. L. annullāre, to bring to nothing. Prefix dis- here intensifying the negative force of the verb.

Dyscryue, v. 25. 35. See Discriue.

Dystyncte, ppl. a. distinguished, differentiated, 24. 30. L. distinctus, past part. of distinguere.

Dytty, sb. song, ditty, 137. 14. OF. ditte, poem; L. dictātum, from dictāre, to dictate.

Earnest, a. serious, 20. 5. OE. eorneste, from eornust, sb.

Effemynatede, ppl. a. rendered unmanly, enervated, 15. 16. Past part. of Effeminate, from L. effeminatus.

Efstones, adv. afterwards, again, 103. 22. OE. eft, again, afterwards; sōne, soon; with adv. suffix -s from the adv. Gen.

Egal, a. equal, 93. 11. OF. egal; L. aequālem.

Egerly, adv. zealously, keenly, 111. 22. OF. egre; L. acer, acrem, sharp, keen.

Egyptians, 46. 29.

Elder, a. older, 101. 2. OE. ieldra, ēldra, mutated com-Espiall, sb. spy, 121. 3. OF. espiaûté, the action of spying.

Estymer, sb. estimator, judge, 76. 18. L. aestimâre, to value.

Euel willing, ppl. a. unwilling, averse, 42. 3. Euel, OE. yfel, in sense of un-, not.

Euen verye they, 108. 27; even those very persons. OF. verái, true.

Euenynge, sb. evening, 60. 18. OE. ēfnung, from v. ēfnian, to become evening.

Euer, adv. always, at all times, 49. 23, 110. 19. OE. ēfre.

Euripides, 96. 29.

Europe, 107. 35.

Excommunicate, ppl. a. ex-communicated, 20. 33. L. excommunicátus, past part. of excommunicâre.

Existimacion, -ymatyon, sb. estimation, valuation, 10. 10, 58. 24. L. existimâtio (-ōnem), estimation.

Exploit, v. perform, achieve, 95. 4. From Exploit, sb. L. explicitum, that which is unfolded, ended.

Expressly pronounced, 137. 20, uttered clearly or with emphasis; or possibly, exactly, according to a set formula. L. expressus, distinct.

F

Fabricius, 37. 36.

False, a. faulty, an erroneous or corrupt version, 96. 5. L. falsus, false, from fallere, to deceive.

Falshed, sb. falsehood, 127. 25. From OF. fals, with ME. suffix -hed, denoting quality.

Fantasy, v. to fancy, desire, 60. 4. From Fantasy, sb.; late L. phantasia.

Fardell, sb. burden, load, 96.

15. OF. fardel, dim. of farde, a burden.

Farfurth, farfurth, adv. far, far on, 50. 10, 53. 5, 109. 19. OE. feor, far; forð forward, with u from the compar. furðor.

Fasion, fassion, -yon, sb. method, manner, fashion, 19. 22, 66. 6, 67. 4, 78. 28. OF. façon; L. factio (-ōnem), from facere, to make.

Faour, sb. countenance, looks, 3. 10. L. favor (-em).

Faute, fawt, sb. fault, 10. 14, 80. 6; defect, 64. 19. OF. faute. Mod. Eng. fault.

Fayne, v. feign, make pretence of, 35. 1; imagine, invent, 41. 15. OF. feindre (feignant), L. fingere, to form, feign.

Fearce, a. fierce, spirited, 51. 32. OF. fers, fiers; Mod. F. fier; L. fœrus.

Feare from, v. frighten from, make afraid of, 104. 1, 105. 10, 125. 8, 129. 15. OE. færan, to frighten, terrify.

Feate, sb. act, deed, 9. 25, 26; crafts, industries, 97. 20; art, employment, 6. 17, 38. 8. OF. fait, fait; L. factum, a thing done.

Felles, sb. skins, 75. 7. OE. fell.

Fellones, sb. pl. felons, 11. 37. OF. felon, a. and sb.; low L. fœllōn-em.

Ferefull, a. terrible, causing fear, 105. 22. OE. fær, sudden danger, fear.

Ferfurth, adv. 53. 5. See Farfurth.

Feruent, a. eager, hot, 118. 31. L. fervens, pres. part. of fervère, to boil.

Fetch about a circuit or compasse, 43. 16, to describe a compass, make a circuit, go round in circular form.
Finest, 134. 5. See Note.
Flanders, 1. 12, 31. 32.
Flickering, a. unstable, wandering, 87. 7. OE. aetician, to flutter.
Fond, a. foolish, silly, 7. 9, 9. 35. Past part. of archaic v. Fon, to lose savour.
Forsene, ppl. a. provided, 135. 32. A literal translation of L. prœvidère.
Forsalle, v. to intercept goods before the market, to buy up in order to obtain a monopoly, 18. 37. From OE. forsealle, sb. intercepting, plot.
For whie, why, wherefore, 65. 26. ME. for uchi; cf. OE. to huy; huy, instr. of hweat, what.
Foynes, sb. thrusts, 120. 22. OF. foine, an eel-spear; L. fuscina, trident.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>France</th>
<th>12. 33, 14. 14, 33. 3, 34. 18</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Franckely, adv. readily, liberally, 75. 9. From Frank, a. low L. francus, free, from OHG. franko, a Frank.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frey, v. make afraid, frighten, 130. 7. A shortened form of Affray; OF. effraier, to frighten.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Freare, sb. friar, 23. 18, 32, 29. 5, 7, 11, 30. ME. frere; OF. frère, brother.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French, 14. 32, 15. 2. French king, 31. 22.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fric, a. Variant of free, 68. 28. OE. frēo, frēo.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frindes marchauntes, sb. merchant-friends, friends who are merchants, 110. 30. The two nouns in apposition.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frindes marchaunte men, 111. 32; the merchants of their friends. L. amicorum negotiatores.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From thens, adv. phr. from that place, 18. 2. OE. þannes, adv. Gen.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frustate, v. 61. 32. Error for Frustrate; from stem of L. frustrāri, to render vain.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugatyue, a. having run away, 31. 29. L. fugitivus; -ative from analogy with fug-ator, -acious.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

G

Galen’s Microtechne, 96. 33.
Gallaunt, -awnte, a. showy, gorgeous, 23. 10; rich, goodly, 55. 33. OF. galant, pres. part. of galer, to make merry.
Gallous, a. fit for the gallows, villainous, wicked, 29. 8. From Gallows, sb. OE. gealga; ME. galwe, galow, usually pl.
Gallymalfreye, sb. medley, hotchpotch, 40. 12. OF. galimafrée.

Garnishing, sb. adornment, furnishing, 55. 33. 65. 32. From Garnish, v.; OF. garnir (garniss-ant), to fortify, garnish; OHG. warnôn.

Gather boldenes, gain heart, pluck up courage, 33. 30.

Gawl, sb. to hit on the gawl, to touch on a sore or tender point, 28. 34. OE. gealla, a gall or sore on a horse.

Geaste wyse, adv. guest-wise, in manner of a guest, 7. 29. OE. giest, guest; wiše, manner.

Geer, sb. gear, tackle, stuff, 98. 17; trappings, appurtenances, 136. 10. Icel. gervi, gear, apparel, from görr, prepared, past. part. of göra, gera, to make, prepare.

Gentle, a. of gentle birth, 18. 19. OF. gentil; L. gentilis, from gens, race, family. Confused with adj. in -ly.

Germaneynes, sb. Germans, 32. 5. L. Germanus; ME. Germayne, Germanys.

Geue, v. as my mynde geueth me, 43. 10, imparts (to), teaches, directs, moves.

Gieste, v. jest, 50. 3. From Jest, sb.; OF. geste, tale, romance; L. rés gesta, a thing done.

Giles, Peter, of Antwerp, 2. 15, 3. 7, 4. 30, 7. 30, 46. 6, 47. 30.

Gladlier, adv. more gladly, 47. 21. Compar. of Gladly; OE. gladly.

Gode wote, int. God knows, 85. 7. OE. wāt, he knows; from witun, to know.

Godlye, adv. in godly fashion, piously, 99. 20. OE. God, sb. + adv. suffix -lice.

Goo to, int. go to! come! 31. 22. Cf. L. age.

Gown, sb. garment, 87. 12. OF. goune, a loose robe; mediaeval L. gunna, a garment of fur.

Gramercye, for. For nothing, literally for thanks, 99. 15. OF. grand, great; merci, thanks.

Grecks, 96. 9.

Grewed, ppl. a. troubled, bored, 71. 38. F. grever; L. gravâre, to burden.

Greyffes, sb. griefs, 92. 35. OF. grief, gref.

Grislye, a. terrible, 28. 20. From Grise, v.; OE. grīsan, to shudder.

Grosser, a. plainer, simpler, 106. 17. Compar. of Gross; L. grossus, fat, thick.

Ground upon, v. take as one’s basis, take one’s stand on, 130. 37. From OE. grund, sb. ground.

*Gulike, country of, 4. 13, 5. 5.

*Gulikians, 4. 24.

Guyse, sb. way, manner, 76. 16. OF. guise, from OHG. wisa, way, manner.

Gyaunte, sb. giant, 82. 23. OF. geant, geiant; ME. geant; L. gigantem.

Gyell, sb. guile, 85. 36. ME. gile, gyle; OF. guile.

Gyues, sb. fetters, shackles, 23. 26. ME. give, fetters, specially for the legs.

H

Habilitye, sb. ability, capacity, 9. 20. Be in habilyte, 8. 2, be able to. OF. abileté, habilité; L. habilitatem. L.
initial h common in sixteenth cent., but probably silent.
Handsome, a. manageable, convenient, fit, adapted, 120. 14, 30. From Hand, v. to handle, manage.
Handy, a. belonging to the hands, mechanical, 63. 27. A new formation from Hand in place of OE. hendig.
Handycraft, sb. handicraft, 15. 20. For Handcraft, remodelled on hand-ywork, OE. handgeworc.
Hard, harde, v. pret. and part. heard, 21. 32, 34. 27, 46. 25, 95. 20, 124. 15, 134. 22. OE. hieran, past part. gehiered; ME. heren, herd, hard. Cf. influence of r + consonant on pronunciation of e in clerk, Derby.
Hardenes, sb. hardship, 15. 23. OE. heardness, hardiness. For sense cf. hardship.
Hardynes, sb. hardihood, boldness, daring, 6. 25. From OF. hardi, a. with OE. suffix -ness.
Harneis, sb. armour, 120. 8, 13. 18. OF. harneis.
Hastie to, a. eager, precipitate, 20. 38. OF. hastif, pl. hastis, whence a new sg. hasti.
Hawte, a. haughty, 105. 22. In fifteenth cent., haute, from F. haut-e, high, L. alt-us: later haught; with gh from analogy with native words, cf. delight for deite.
Haylse, v. greet, salute, 4. 35. ON. heilsa, to greet, hail.
Heare, sb. hair. Of one heare, by one hair, 88. 5. OE. hær, hair; ME. heer, hear, haiere.
Hedlonges, adv. headlong, precipitately, 41. 26. ME. heaudlinges; OE. head, with adv. suffix -linga, lunga, corrupted from analogy with long, and addit. suffix -s from adv. Gen.
Helizeus (Elisha), 29. 16, 28.
Helpes, sb. remedies, aids, 100. 9. OE. help, sb.
Henry VIII, 1. 2.
Herodian, 96. 31.
Herodotus, 96. 31.
Hesychius, 96. 25.
Hippocrates, 96. 33.
Hole, a. whole. 120. 7. OE. hól, whole; Mod. Eng. has a dialectal spelling with wh.
Holsom, a. wholesome, 5. 21. OE. hól, whole, + suffix -sum; ME. holsom, -som. See prec.
Holy, adv. wholly, utterly, 44. 30. From prec. + -ly, OE. -lice.
Homely, a. and adv. plain, simple, 64. 33; in homely fashion, plainly, simply, 3. 9, 64. 30.
Homer, 96. 29.
Honest, a. honourable, 89. 29. L. honestus, honourable.
Houses, sb. households, 18. 10.
Howke, v. to hook or drag one in against his will, 32. 13. From Hook, sb.; OE. hóc.
Howke, sb. by howke or crook, 16. 26, by any device, by fair means or foul. A common phrase from the sixteenth cent. on, of doubtful origin.
Hundreth, a. hundred, 121. 26. OE. hundred corrupted by Icel. hundrað.
Hurley-burley, hurlie-burlie, sb. tumult, confusion, 34. 13, 37. 23. OF. hurlee, howling, from hurler; L. ululare, to howl. Burly, a reduplication of hurly.

Husbande, v. till, cultivate, tend as a husbandman, 94. 37. From Husband, sb.; see next.

Husbandes, sb. tenders, husbandmen, 50. 28. OE, husedbonda, one dwelling in a house, the master of the house.

*Hythloday, Raphael, 1. 3, 3. 30, 4. 34, 7. 21, 47. 31.

I, J

Iauell, sb. a rascal, a worthless fellow, 28. 37. ME. iavelle.

Jeopardye, Ioperdie, sb. hazard, danger, 6. 23, 10. 11, 22. 1, 11. OF. jeu parti; L. focus partitus, a divided game, hence uncertainty, hazard.

Jeoperdous, a. dangerous, hazardous, 49. 2. From prec.

Iette, v. strut, swagger, 13. 34. OF. jeter, to throw; L. jac-tare. Meaning influenced by L. jactari, to boast, strut.

Ight, a. eighth, 1. 2. OE. eahftōda; ME. eighthe, ighthe.

Ilande, sb. island, 48. 11. OE. igland (ig, island, + land); ME. iland. Mod. isl- from analogy with isle.

Imbrayde, v. 104. 36. See Embrayd.

Impery, sb. empire, 46. 33. L. imperium, empire.

Importunate, a. unseasonable, troublesome, 18. 8. L. importānus, + suffix -ate.

Importune, a. importunate, 4. 10. L. importānus.

Imprint letters, v. print in type, 97. 34. From OF. empreinte, sb. a stamp, print; past part. fem. of empreindre, L. imprimere, to impress. Hence the Mod. Eng. shortened form print.

Improve, v. disapprove, disallow, 29. 9. L. improbāre, to condemn, disapprove, from improbus, bad.

In awnters, in case, properly in the adventure, 32. 24. F. en aventure.

Incommoditie, sb. inconvenience, discomfort, 17. 37, 85. 29, 108. 33, 112. 2. L. incommoditas. See Commodity.

Incommodyous, a. uncomfortable, 23. 34. In + Med. L. commodiosus.

Incontinent, incontynente, adv. immediately, forthwith, 13. 16, 19. 29, 30. 10, 32. 25, et passim. F. incontinent; L. in continenti, in continuous time, without break.

Indifferent, indyfferente, a. moderate, reasonable, just, 27. 25, 76. 18, 133. 31. L. indifferens(-entem), of medium quality.

Infamed, ppl. a. 77. 31. See Enfamed.

Ingrosse, v. to monopolize, buy up the whole market, 18. 37. From the phrase In gross; F. en gros, in the lump, wholesale.

Iniurie, sb. injury, hurt, 20. 27. L. injuria, wrong, hurt.

Inordinate, a. excessive, uncontrolled, 44. 33. L. inor-dinátus, from ordínāre, to order.

Insensibilitie, sb. absence of feeling, 92.15. Late L. insensibilitās, the condition of being insensible.

Institute, pp.pl. a. established, constituted, 105. 32. L. institūtus, past part. of instituere, to establish.

Instructe, pp.pl. a. instructed, taught, 59. 5, 81. 30, 105. 31. L. instructus, past part. of instruere, to instruct (struere, to build).

Instrumentes, documents, 75. 22. L. instruēmentum, instrument, tool; from instruere.

Into, prep. among, 49. 38. OE. intō, in, into, among.

Intreatance, sb. entreaty, intercession, 4. 9. From OF. entraîer; L. in + trāctāre, to treat, handle.

Integrate, v. See Entreat.

Inuade, v. attack, makewaron, 118. 34. L. invādere; in, in, + vādere, to go.

Inuehyng, pres. part. inveighing, sailing, 126. 1. L. in + vēhere, to carry, bear.

Inuisibly, a. for invisible, 128. 38. L. invisibilis, that cannot be seen.

Inurede, pp.pl. a. accustomed, exercised, practised, 15. 3, 33. 27, 97. 18. L. in, in + ure, to exercise, use.

Ionckettes, sb. junkets, sweetmeats, delicacies, 72. 15. Ital. giuncata, a kind of cream-cheese, so-called because served on rushes. (L. juncus, rush.)

Italy, 31. 31, 33. 2.

K

Kendale, v. kindle, 84. 23. ME. kindlen; ON. kynda, to kindle.

King, the (of England), 11. 23.

Kinrede, sb. kindred, members of the same family or race, 66. 8. OE. cyn, kin, + suffix -rāden, state, condition. Mod. Eng. has excrescent d.

Kipe, kyphe, v. keep, maintain, 14. 19, 140. 38. OE. cēpan; ME. kepe, also kip, possibly influenced by ME. kip, to seize. (ON. kippa.)

Knowledge, v. acknowledge, 53. 9, 93. 17, 137. 24. ME. knowlechen, v. from know + vbl. suffix -lechen, OE. lēcan. Hence Mod. Eng. acknowledge.

Kyele, sb. keel. Rydged Kyeles, 6. 11, keels projecting below the bottoms of the vessels. Icel. kjölf, keel.

Kyll, v. kylleth them vp, 140. 3, kills them off. Cf. Shakesp. As You Like It, ii. 1. 62 'Kill them up.'

L

Laborsome, laboursome, a. laborious, toilsome, 46. 23, 59. 30, 70. 11. OF. labour, L. labor, + OE. suffix -sum.

Laestrygones (Lestrygones), 7. 4.

Lauasse, a. lavish, profuse, 13. 9. OF. lavasse, lavache, sb. a deluge of rain; ME. lavasse, lavesse, sb. and a., later corrupted to lavish.

Laundes, sb. glades, grassy plains, 16. 15. OF. lande;
Glossarial Index

Mod. Eng. (with loss of d), lawn.
Lay their heddes togethier, take counsel togethier, 25. 36.
Laye in hys necke, laid to his charge, at his door, 42. 33.
Leade oono's life, 43. 18.
Leage, sb. bond, alliance, league. 31. 35. Late L. liga, from ligare, to bind.
Leaned vnto, v. depended upon, derived support from, 11. 24. OE. hlænan, to lean.
Lease, conj. lest, 61. 35. A form of Less; OE. by lēs ðe, by that the less that, generally shortened to Mod. Eng. lest.
Least, conj. lest, 15. 16. See Lease.
Leane, v. to for sake, give up, 20. 14. OE. læfan.
Leese, leise, v. lose, 37. 25. 83. 31. 111. 33; lose, waste, 28. 9. OE. lēsan, to lose; ME. lēsen, løsen.
Leffe, sb. 62. 18. Variant of Life. OE. līf.
Lesse, a. less, 113. 25. OE. lēssa used as comparative of lytel.
Let, v. to prevent, hinder, 61. 11, 86. 31, 91. 5. OE. lettan, to hinder, make late; from lat, a. late.
Let, lette, sb. hindrance, impediment, 20. 6. 23. 9, 59. 23, 104. 19. From the prec.
Lewde, a. ignorant, worthless, 10. 28, 90. 8, 118. 26. OE. læwed, ignorant; properly, belonging to the laity; from L. laicus, lay.
Licensed, licysed from, ppl. a. exempt from, excused, 60. 36, 63. 12. From Licence, L. licentia, freedom to act.

Lieuxetanautes, sb. lieutenants, deputys, 121. 28. F. lieu tenant; L. locum tenens (tenentem), one who takes another's place.
Lightlye, adv. easily, for any slight cause, 57. 20. OE. léohhtlice, from léohht, easy, trifling.
Liqueresse, sb. liquorice, 52. 9. AF. lycorys; L. liquiritia, liquorice.
Logycalles, 82. 17. See Note.
Looke, v. see, 16. 2. OE. lūcian.
Lores, sb. doctrines, opinions, 94. 26. OE. lār, learning, doctrine.
Lubboir, sb. dolt, 80. 2. ME. lōbres; cf. MDu. lobe, clown, Lucian, 96. 27.
Lumpshe, a. clumsy, stupid, 80. 37. From Lump, sb., cf. Norw. lump, block; Dutch lomp, clumsy.
Lust, v. please, desire, 17. 26, 103. 12. OE. lystan, impers. to please; ME. listen, lusten, pers. or impers.
Lusty, a. joyful, 130. 23. From OE. lust, sb. delight, joy.
Lyczensed, 60. 36. See Licensed.
Lyghtly, adv. easily, 55. 25. See Lightlye.
Lyse, v. lose, 100. 24. See Leese.
Lyst, v. desire, please, 127. 22. See Lust.

M

*Macariens, the, 38. 26.
Madder, sb. a plant used in dyeing, 75. 6. OE. mœddre.
Made away, ppl. a. made away with, destroyed, 23. 21.
Make nothing to, make no difference to, 91. 31.
Make out of the waye, put out of the way, dispose of, 103. 37.
Maner, sb. Taken with the maner, 25. 28, caught in the act. Af. manere; Ital. mà-niera, manner, mode of handling (L. manus, hand).
Mansleers, sb. manlayers, killers, 14. 27. From OE. mansléan, to kill, murder, with agent suffix -er. Cf. OE. manslaga, man-slayer.
Marchaunte-men, sb. traders, merchants, 111. 6. OF. mar-chant, merchant.
Marrish, sb. marsh, swamp, 100. 38. OF. mareis, late L. mariscus from mare, sea.
Marueil, sb. marvel, wonder, 28. 32. F. merveille; L. mè-ribilia, wonderful things.
Master of the Rolls, 1. 16.
Me selfe, pron. myself, 43. 38, 44. 22. OE. më, dative of pers. pron. + emphatic pron. self. In ME. often weakened to misel, and mi confused with the possessive, cf. Mod. Eng. myself.
Meanes, sb. by thy meanes, 24. 17, with the help of this.
Pl. form of adj. used as sb. and treated as singular. AF. meien, medium, hence aid, help; L. medianus, from media, middle.
Meate, sb. food, provision, 68. 19. OE. mete, food.
Meerye, a. merry, 130. 23. OE. myrge, merry; ME. merie, mirie.
Meesse, sb. a dish, portion, course, 71. 14. OF. mes, dish, course; L. missum, that which is sent up.
Merely, adv. gaily, joyfully, merrily, 128. 22. ME. meri-liche; OE. myrig + lice.
Methe, sb. mead, a sweet drink usually made of honey, 52. 8. OE. medu; cf. ME. forth for ford.
Milan, 31. 28.
Mind, sb. to mi mind, 28. 4, to my taste or liking.
*Mithra, Mythra, 123. 25, 134. 33.
Mitio, 42. 13
Mo, moo, a. more (in number), more numerous, 34. 3, 65. 11, 83. 16, 105. 37, 108. 15, 124. 32. OE. mà, more; in Bible of 1611 moe: Ps. xl. 12 'they are moe then the haires of mine head.'
Morderer, sb. murderer, 21. 37. From OE. myrdrian; ME. morðren, morðren, with agent suffix -er (OE. ëre).
More, Sir Thomas, 9. 18, 11. 2, 30. 1, 43. 9.
Moses, law of, 21. 23.
Moughte-eaten, ppl. a. moth-eaten, 35. 10. OE. møðda, møðde, moth; ME. moughte, mothe.
Mouinge, mouynge, sb. movement, motion, 82. 25, 97. 16. 120. 15. From Move, v.; L. mòvère.
Moyles, sb. pl. mules, 34. 6. L. múlus.
Mulettour, sb. muleteer, mule-driver, 34. 6. F. muletier, from mulet, a mule. With exchange of suffixes -ier, -or.
Mydes. See Middles.
Myenes, sb.pl. mines, 22. 28.
From Mine, v., F. miner.
Myke, a. meek, quiet, 15. 36.
Variant of Meek. Icel. mjukr; M.E. meke.

*Mythra. See Mithra.

N
Namelye, adv. especially, particularly, 61. 3, 187. 27; literally 'by name'; OE. nama, name, + adv. suffix -lice.
Naples, 31. 29.
Navarre, kingdom of, 32. 11.
Neades, nedes, adv. needs, of necessity, 26. 25, 38. 7. OE. niedes; M.E. nedes; adv. Gen. from nied, sb. need, necessity.

*Nephelogetes, the, 111. 4, 17, 19.
Nephewes, sb. 189. 10, nephews, or (possibly) grandsons, cf. L. nepos which may mean either. OF. neveu; L. nepotem, acc.; with partial assimilation to L. spelling in sixteenth cent.
Nero, 40. 8.
Nether, ... nor, conj. neither ... nor, 74. 12. OE. ne + æþer from ægæþæþer, either of two. Perhaps a misprint for the usual form Nother.
Newe fanglenes, sb. love of novelty, 18. 22. See Newfangled.
Nexte, a. nearest, 103. 6, 106.

37. OE. nëhst, superl. of nëh, nëah, nigh.
Nigeshe, a. niggardly, 81. 16.
From Icel. hñögr; Swed. njugg, niggardly, with suffix -ish.
Nother, adv. or conj. neither, 88. 15, 188. 11. Nother ... nother = neither ... nor, 63. 33, 85. 34, 94. 24, 29, 100. 1.
Nother ... nor, 9. 20, 25, 47. 11, 63. 11, 72. 2, 99. 4, 6.
Alone after a negative = nor, 12. 14, 65. 13, 68. 31, 93. 33, 119. 7, 138. 38. M.E. nowder; O.E. nüwer from náhwöder, pron. adj. neither of the two, cf. L. neuter. Further shortened in M.E. to nor; M.E. adv. use probably influenced by ader, either, or.
Noughte, nowght, sb. nothing, a thing of no value, 41. 30, 42. 29. OE. nüwiht, náht, nothing.
Noughtenes, sb. worthlessness, 31. 19, 81. 1. From prec.
Noughty, a. worthless, evil, 40. 24. From Nought, see Noughte.
Noyinge, pres. part. annoying, harming, 16. 10. Pres. part. of M.E. nuwen for anuien, to annoy; from OF. anoi, anui, vexation; L. in odio, in hatred.
Noyous, a. harmful, noxious, 15. 29. From OF. anoi, vexation + suffix -ous.
Noysome, a. troublesome, harmful, 5. 31. M.E. noy for anoy, OF. anoi, vexation, + OE. suffix -sum.
Nyggyshe, a. niggardly, 138. 38. See Nigeshe.
Nyse, a. particular, fastidious, 65. 9. OF. nice, foolish.
simple; L. nescius, ignorant, with change of meaning in ME.

O

Occupie, occupye, v. use, employ, trade with, 76. 23, 88. 29, make use of, practise, 60. 10, 115. 11. L. occupare, to lay hold of.

Occupieng, occupyenge, sb. use, employment, 88. 26, 143. 17; trade, traffic, 39. 8, 111. 27; intercourse, dealing, 66. 4. From Occupie, v.

Of, prep. (1) from, out of (denoting the source), 23. 21, 24. 1, 24. 5, 81. 26, 89. 34, 107. 11; (2) by (denoting the agent), 14. 28, 38, 34. 4, 82. 23, 84. 20, 89. 20, 21, 131. 36, 137. 23; (3) with, by, from (denoting the instrument), 29. 19, 83. 13, 70. 36, 110. 17; of his owne head, 73. 24, of his own will or motion. OE. of, prep. of, from, out of.

Of, prep. on. Of both sides, &c.; on, 5. 22, 36. 13, 48. 21, 98. 20, 153. 12; of the contrary part, on the other hand, 24. 38, 76. 36, 91. 25; of both sides them, 71. 32, on both sides of them; of one heare, 88. 5, by one hair.

Of a child, 30. 24, from childhood. Cf. Mark ix. 21 'Of a child.'

Of that, 25. 4, for that, because. Of, adv. off, 24. 22. OE. of, adv. off, away.

On lieue, alive, 116. 20. OE. on life; on weakened to o, a in ME.

One, prep. on, 28. 33, 92. 32. OE. on.

Onely, onlye, adv. alone, 15.

31, 115. 23. OE. ân-líc, a. singular, only.

Ones, adv. once, formerly, 22. 6, 57. 8; once, sometime, 143. 33. Adv. use of Gen. of OE. numeral ân. Mod. Eng. has ce for final voiceless s; cf. mice, pence.

Onles, conj. unless, 43. 14. OE. on + læs, less, hence on lesse that, on a less supposition than that.

Onwardnes, sb. advance, progress, 92. 4. From Onward, adv.; OE. onward, against, toweard, approaching, going forward.

Openner, sb. revealer, discloser, 26. 11. From OE. openian, to open, reveal, with agent suffix âre.

Order, v. control, dispose, 25. 16. From F. ordre, sb. order; L. ordre, -inem.

Orelles, orels, or else, 9. 32, 15. 14, 20. See Elles.

Other, adv. or conj. either. Other ... or = either ... or, 13. 22, 33. 21, 46. 33, 51. 10, 55. 26. Other ... or els (else), 30. 28, 52. 7, 58. 6, 10. 33, ... or elles, 31. 20, 100. 21, 105. 36. ME. ofer ... ofer, ofer ... or; OE. òde ... òde, with compar. suffix -er, and shortening to or. Also strengthened by adv. Els, elles, q. v.

Outlyving, v. outliving, surviving, 100. 13.

Ouerrunne, ppl. a. overrun, 14. 37. ME. runnen; OE. urnen, past part. of irnan, to run; treated as a weak verb. Prefix ofer, over.

Ouersonne, ppl. a. having committed an oversight, imprudent, 58. 26. Active use of past part. of Oversee; OE. oferseon, overlook.

Owte, adv. out, forth, 126. 25. The use of the adv. alone to supply the sense of the vb. of motion is common in OE. and ME.

P

Palinurus, 3. 27.

Parson, sb. person, 27. 1. ME. persone; L. persóna, a mask, character in a play. ME. also parson, with change of e to a before r + cons. Mod. Eng. differentiates according to meaning.

Partein, v. pertain, belong, 27. 16. OF. partenir; L. pertinère, to belong.

Partie, partye, sb. the person, 22. 8, 102. 3. OF. partie, a part, party; L. partita, fem. of partitus, divided.

Passe, v. surpass, 87. 21. Late L. passäre, to pass, from passus, step.

Payntinges, sb. painting, artificial means, 105. 2. From ME. peinten, to paint; OF. pint, past part. of peindre; L. pingere.

Penny father, sb. miser, niggard, one who hoards his pence, 81. 16.

Pensifenes, sb. care, anxiety, 118. 14, 139. 4. From Pensive, OF. pensif; cf. penser, to think; L. pensäre, weigh, ponder.

Performe, v. complete, supply, 74. 28. AF. parformer, OF. parfournir, lit. to furnish thoroughly.

Persia, 22. 31; King of, 22. 36, 23. 8.

Peryshe, v. destroy, make to perish, 56. 14. Transitive use of Perish. From OF. peris-, lengthened stem of perir; L. perire.

Phylarch, 51. 1, 52. 22, 57. 6, 9, 27, 58. 8.

Pike a thanke, 54. 3, to curry favour, hence pickthank.

Plat, sb. plate, 77. 11. OF. plat, flat; late L. platta, plate of metal.

Plato, 3. 28, 30. 36, 31. 15, 41. 15, 42. 36, 96. 17.

Platte fourme, sb. ground plan, 55. 31. F. plate-forme, platform, model.

Plautus, 40. 3.

Plesauntnes, sb. pleasingness, delight, 87. 5. From Pleasant, a.; OF. pleasant, pleasing, pres. part. of plesir; L. placère.

Plotte, sb. plot of ground, site, 50. 10, 64. 17. ME. plot.

Pluck, v. to snatch, take, 44. 11, to pull, 17. 30, 18. 32; plucked back, 63. 23, recalled, fetched back. OE. pluccian, to pluck, tear.

Plutarch, 96. 26.

Policie, sb. practice, mode of procedure, 51. 25. L. politia, Gr. πολιτεία, polity, government.

Polle, v. to cut or crop the hair, 24. 20, 37. 28, fig. to shear, clip bare, 13. 6. ME. pollen, to cut the hair; LG. polle, head, pate.

*Polylerites, the, 22. 32.

Portugal, sb. a native of Portugal, a Portuguese, 4. 1. The usual ME. name.

Possible, adv. possibly, 18. 11, F. possible, a.; L. possibilis, able to be done.

Posternno, sb. a small back-door, 55. 7. OF. posterne, posterle, L. posterula, from posterus, behind.

Praye, sb. prey, booty, 82. 1, 110. 28, 121. 15. AF. preis; L. praeda, prey.

Precyncte, sb. boundary, limit, 24. 33. L. praecinctus, past part. of praecingere, to gird about.

Preparaunce, sb. preparation, making ready, 34. 11. From Prepare, v.; L. praeparare, to make ready before.

Prescript, ppl. a. prescribed, 39. 10, 44. 33, 66. 15, 103. 24.

L. praescriptus, past part. of praescribere, to write beforehand.

Presently, adv. in one's very presence, being present, 45. 38, 76. 14, 91. 24, 129. 9.

From Present, a.; L. praesens (-sentem), being in front.

Pretensod, ppl. a. intended, purposed, 104. 17. Late L. praetensus for praetentus, alleged, held before.

Preuy, a. privy, secret, 29. 35.

ME. priri, preui, F. privé; L. privatus, private.

Primifest, 134. 5. See Note.

Pristynate, a. pristine, original, 92. 8. L. pristinus, ancient, + suffix -ate.

Proctour, sb. procurator in the law-courts, 106. 2. Short for procurator; late L. acc. prōcurātorem, manager, deputy.

Profe, proffe, sb. trial, proof, evidence, 26. 31, 83. 35. Nexte yeares proffe, 75. 3, what next year may prove to be. Older spellings of Proof, ME. prove, prove; F. preuve, sb. Doublo forms from the ME. verb.; cf. OF. prover, to prove; preuve, he proves; L. proba're, probat.

Profitable let, a. reasonable hindrance, 73. 9.

Properlie, adv. singularly, peculiarly, 77. 24. From F. propre, a.; L. proprius, (-um), one's own, peculiar to oneself.

Psalmist, The, 29. 10.

Puisaunce, puysaunce, sb. power, might, 14. 4, 61. 31, 111. 12. F. puissance, power.

Pulleyne, sb. chickens, 51. 25.

OF. pouline, young of an animal; late L. puleanus from pullus.

Puppettes, sb. dolls, 78. 17.

MF. poupette, dim. of poupee, doll; cf. L. poupée, girl, doll.

Purple die falls, skins of purple dye, 75. 7.

Putt furthe, ppl. a. brought forward, 58. 15.

Putt to, apprenticed to, given into charge of, 60. 6.

Puyssaunte, a. powerful, mighty, 32. 7. F. puissant, powerful; L. possens (-sentem) for potens.

Pyked, ppl. a. picked, chosen, 95. 36. ME. pikken; ON. pikka.
Pylled, v. plundered, 33.
23. F. piller; L. pillâre, to pillage.

Q
Quicke, quycke, sb. living, 123.
24, 129. 10, the vital part.
13. 7. Towchyd one the quicke, 28. 33, wounded in the most vital part. OE. cwic, a. living.
Quod, v. quoth, said, 8. 17, 9. 34, 129.
10, the vital part.
OE. cwati, a. of cweSan, to say; ME. quath, quoth, weakened to quod.
Quyte, a. quit, free, 21. 15. OF. quite, released, free; late L. quietus.

R
Ranke, a. abundant, plentiful, 12. 5. OE. ræcan, strong, proud.
Rauin, rauye, sb. rapine, plunder, 45. 3, 63. 13, 123.
20, 141. 17. OF. ravine, L. rapina, plunder.
Recule, v. retreat, recoil, 133.
26. F. reculer, to recoil; from L. cûs, hinder part.
Refrayne, refreyn, v. to check, restrain, 12. 11, 99. 22, to restrain oneself, refrain from, 42. 37. L. refrenâre, to curb; from frénasçs, a curb, bridle.
Reiecte, ppl. a. rejected, excluded, 127. 17. Past part.
of Reject, v., OF. rejecter; L. re, back, jactâre, to throw.
Relygyous men, sb. members of the religious or monastic orders, 62. 12.
Render, v. give up, surrender, 112. 8. F. rendre; L. reddere, to give back.
Renowme, sb. renown, fame,

105. 16. F. renom; from L. nomen, name.
Reparacions, sb. repairs, 64.
22. From L. reparâtus, past part. of reparâre, to repair, make ready again.
Repriued, ppl. a. reprieved, 26.
38. Properly, having one’s sentence re-proved or disallowed. ME. reproven, repreven; OF. proproer, to disallow—3rd sg. pres. reprowe.
Reprochefull, a. full of reproach, disgraceful, 78. 32, 79, 30.
F. reproch; late L. *reprobicdre, from prope, near; hence to bring near to.
Retche, sb. reach, 123. 13. From OE. ræcan, to reach; ME. rechen.
Reuenewes, reuennues, sb. revenues, incomes, 16. 6, 24.
5. From F. revenu, past part. of revenir, to come back; L. revenire.
Reuerende, sb., 45. 31. Probably an error for Reverence; L. reverentia, from reverëri, to revere.
Reyalme, sb. realm, kingdom, 35. 32. AF. realema; late L. *régâlimen, from régâlis, royal.
Ribauld, ribbald, sb., worthless fellow, scoundrel, 28. 37, 29. 19. Low L. ribaldus, ruffian; from OHG. hrîba, prostitute, with masc. suffix -wald (power), cf. Reginald.
Ride, sb. Variant of Reed, 97.
33. OE. hrêod.
Romans, 14. 34, 46. 29.
Rome, Empire of, 46. 34.
Rotte, sb. a disease of sheep, 17. 18. Cf. OE. rotian, to rot.
Roundinge, sb. the rounding of his head, the manner in which his hair is rounded off when cut, 25. 35. Cf. p. 24, l. 21.
OF. robber; derived from OHG. rouba, booty, spoil.
Run at rouers, run at random, rove about, 108. 36. Cf. Du. roover, robber, pirate.
Runne in, v. incur, 38. 11. A literal translation of L. incurrere.
Russhe bucklers, sb. a worthless boaster, a good-for-nothing fellow, 62. 17. Properly, one whose shield is made of rushes. OF. bucler, shield.
Ryddle, ppl. a. got rid of, dispatched, 22. 8. OE. hređdan, to free from.
Ryffe, a. rife, abundant, 12. 5. OE. rif; Icel. rifr, abundant, frequent.
Ryght, a. genuine, 88. 22. OE. riht, true, correct.

S

Sacke, sb. sake, 15. 26. ME. sake, sake, cause; OE. sacu, dispute, litigation.
Sad, sadde, a. sober, serious, 27. 14, 101. 20, 104. 25. OE. seđ, sated; hence quiet, serious.
Saintuarie, sb. sanctuary, 26. 35. OF. saintuarie, shrine; L. sanctuarium.
Sallust, 14. 28.
Sauegarde, sb. safeguard, 25. 22, 36. 31, 133. 18. OF. sauf-garde; from L. salus, safe, and OLG. wardôn, to watch, guard.
Sauffo, prep. save, except, 37. 9. OF. sauf; a., L. saius, safe. Used in ME. as a prep. and conj. with meaning 'these things being safe,' i.e. 'excepted.'
Sauitie, sb. safety, 37. 3. OF. sauvêté; L. saluitas.
Scasely, skaselie, adv. scarcely, hardly, 49. 13, 63. 9, 101. 36, 108. 12. ME. scars-lîche, OF. escars, scarce; late L. ex-carpus for L. excertus, selected.
Sclaunderer, sb. slanderer, 28. 37. From Slander; ME. sclaundre; OF. esclandre, popular form of L. scandalum.
Scoupe, sb. scope, 21. 30. Cf. Ital. scopo, a mark to shoot at; Gr. σκόπως, look-out man, mark aimed at.
Scyence liberal, sb. any accepted branch of knowledge, 61. 11.
Scyllas, 7. 4.
Sealynge, pres. part. 92. 37, putting an end to, curing. But possibly an error for Healing.
Seconde Intentyons, 82. 19. See Note.
Seely, seilie, sely, a. simple, 32. 37, 89. 20, 139. 28. OE. sælig from sæl, time = 'timely' then 'happy, innocent'; 'simple, foolish.'
Seneca, 3. 37, 40. 8.
Sergeauntes at the lawe, sb. Sergeants at law, 106. 2. OF. servant, serjant; late L. servens (-ientem), an officer.
Seruiseable, adv. usefully, 130. 13.
Set by, ppl. a. esteemed, 98. 16. Cf. next.
Sette greate store, make much of, esteem highly, 104. 21.
Sette in theyre neckes, set on them, 114. 26.
Set fyld, field arranged for battle, 61. 24, 117. 26.
Setting furth, vbl. sb. execution, carrying out, 55. 34.
Seuerall, a. separate, distinct, 24. 30, 68. 36, 71. 7, 125. 31, 138. 28; adv. separately, apart, 68. 1, 70. 23. OE. several; med. L. separālis, separate, from separāre, to separate.
Sewer, a. sure, 68. 11, 142. 1. OF. seur, for segr; L. securus.
Sewerly, adv. surely, 14. 8, 37. 30, 120. 3.
Sewter, 11. 10. Variant of Sweter, q. v.
Shamefastenes, sb. shamefacedness, 75. 15. From OE. scamfeæst, a.; OE. scamu, shame, modesty; Æst, firm. Corrupted in Mod. Eng. to shamefaced.
Shelues, sb. sandbanks, reefs, 49. 1. OE. scylf, ledge, shelf.
Shere, sheyre, sb. shire, province, 25, 23, 26. 1. OE. scir.
Shiltreth, v. shelters, protects, 48. 22. From OE. scildtruma, shield-troop, guard; ME. scheltrun, shiltron, a protection; hence Mod. Eng. shelter.
Shrewedly, adv. roughly, badly, 111. 13. From Shrewd, a.; ME. schrewed, past part. of schrewen, to course.
Sickerlye, adv. surely, certainly, 42. 9. From ME. siker, a.; L. sēcūrus, sure.
Simylitude, sb. simile, illustration, 42. 36. L. similītudo (-inēm), likeness; from similis, like.
Single, a. simple, alone, 22.
12. Late L. singulus, single, separate.
*Siphogrant. See Syphogrant.
*Siphogranly (= ward), 69. 36, 71. 15.
Sit, past part. sat, 47. 33. ME. seten (OE. seten), also siten after the infin., OE. sittan.
Skant, adv. scarcely, hardly, 139. 29. ME. skant, a. and adv. insufficient, -ly; Icel. skamt, neut. of skammr, short.
Skaselie, adv. See Scasely.
Skyrmyshe, sb. skirmish, 114. 8. From ME. scarmish, skirmishe, v.; OF. eskermir (eskermissant), to fence.
Slacly, adv. lazily, 23. 28. OE. slac, sleac, a. slack, indolent.
Sleane, ppl. a. slain, 114. 13. From the infin., OE. scean, to slay, past part. geslagen.
Sleping sicknes, sb. lethargy, 92. 16.
Sloughfullenes, sb. slothfulness, 60. 35. From OE. slōw, a. slow, sluggish; ME. slow, slough.
Sloughishnes, sb. sluggishness, sloth, 94. 4. A formation from ME. slough, OE. slāw, as if with OE. suffix -isc. See prec.
Smacke, sb. flavour, taste, 116. 8. OE. smæc, taste.
So that, conj. provided that, 86. 30, 125. 37, 126. 23, 135. 25. OE. swā, so that + pron. ðeal.
Sodde, ppl. a. boiled, 52. 9. OE. soden, past part. of sóðan, to boil.
Sodeyne, a. Sudden, 51. 36, 120. 8. OF. sodain, sudain; late L. *subitanus, sudden.
Som, sb. sum, amount, 38. 36. F. somme; L. summa.
Sophocles, 96. 29.
Spared, ppl. a. dispensed with, 26. 34. OE. sparian, to spare, abstain from.
Speces, sb. spices, 72. 16. ME. spice, spece; OF. espice, spice; L. species (-tern).
Spedelier, adv. more speedily, 64. 27. Compar. of spedeli, OE. spédlice; from spéd, success, speed.
Spende, v. make use of, consume, 64. 36. OE. spendan; from L. dis- or ex-pendere.
Spill, v. to spoil, ruin, 15. 20. OE. spillan, to destroy, waste.
Stage, sb. her owne stage, 39. 36, her proper sphere.
AF. estage, stage, dwelling-house; late L. *staticum, dwelling-place.
Stand in, v. cost, 64. 9. 38. L. constäre, to stand one in, cost.
Staye, sb. pause, delay, 96. 5. In a good staye, 64. 16. stable, well-established. From the vb. Stay, (1) to support; (2) to remain. OF. estaye, sb. a prop.
Stomaked, ppl. a. tempered, hearted, 37. 22. From Stomake, sb.
Stomakes, sb. dispositions, hearts, 36. 38. OF. estomac, stomach.

Stoole, v. stole, 23. 16. ME. stol, stool, pret. of stelen, to steal.
Stoycall, a. stoical, unyielding, harsh, 20. 31. From Stoic, sb., L. stóicus, Gk. Ἴρωκός, a Stoic.
Straunge, a. foreign, 76. 1. Of. estrange; L. exträneus, belonging to the outside.
Strayte, streyte, a. and adv. strict, severe, 11. 36, 20. 28; strictly, 28. 27. Of. estreit; L. strictus.
Subtell, a. subtle, skilful, 40. 35. Of. soïl, soutil; L. subtilitis, fine, subtle. b inserted from L. in sixteenth cent., but not sounded.
Sueter, sb. suitor, those having a suit with any, 29. 38. From F. suite, pursuit, suit at law; late L. type *sequita, for secüta, a following.
Sumwhether, adv. somewhere, 27. 38. OE. sum, some; hweder, hwider, whither; ME. wheder, whider.
Surmount, v. increase, 48. 20. F. surmonter, to mount above.
Suyte, sb. suit, 44. 37. See Sueter.
Swychers, sb. the Swiss, 32. 6. Cf. MHG. Switzer, Swiss; Mod. G. Schweizer.
Symylitude, -lytude, sb. likeness, 20. 36, 45. 36. See Simylitude.
*Syphogrant, 57. 5. 58. 8, 60. 14. 63. 12, 19, 69. 1, 71. 8, 73. 8.
Syrians, 14. 34.

T
Tables, sb. pl. the game of tables, the modern backgammon, 18. 28. F. table; L. tabula, a table, also the game.
Take their houses, 43. 3; take to, &c.
Taprobane (Ceylon), 4. 25.
Temsice, George, provost of Cassel, 2. 1.
Terence, 42. 13.
Thadmystryatyon, sb. the administration, 22. 22. The elision of the e of the definite article before a word beginning with a vowel was common in ME.; cf. then-tente, 98. 19.
Than, adv. then, 10. 3, 19. 14, 46. 16, 131. 8. OE. ðænne; ME. than, then.
The owne, its own, 80. 32, 92. ii, 126. 24.
Thefe stolen, ppl. a. stolen by a thief, robbed, 23. 19.
Compound of These, sb., OE. þéof, and Stolen, past part. of to steal; OE. stelan, past part. gestolen.
Their whear, adv. there where, 18. 5. OE. þær, there, hwær, where; ME. ther where; ther confused in form with pron. their, ther = their, from ON. þagr, gen. pl.
Them selfes, pron. themselves, 44. 21. OE. hém, dat. pron. + self, pron.; ME. hem-, themself. On the analogy of misel, herself, we have ME. theirselves with self treated as a sb. and made pl. Hence also, confusedly, themselves.
Theodorus, 96. 24.
Theophrastus, 96. 18.
There awaye, adv. in these parts, 116. 32. Cf. thereabouts.
Thether, adv. thither, there,
Ulysses, 3. 28.

Vnder, prep. below, inferior to, 76. 31. OE. under, beneath.

Unneadfull, a. unnecessary, 65. 25. OE. un- negative prefix; ME. nedful, needful, from OE. nied, necessity.

Vnnumerable, a. unnumbered, countless, 15. 26. L. numerabilis, that can be numbered, with Eng. negative prefix un- for L. in-.

Vnsensybylyte, sb. Forinsensibility, 91. 18. L. insensibilitas, with E. un- for L. in-.

Vnsercheable, a. that cannot be sought out, 138. 5. From ME. serchen, to search; OF. cercher; L. cercare, to go round, explore.

Vnthyfyt, a. An error for Unthriftiy, 64. 4. From ME. prift; Icel. prift from prifa, to thrive.

Vntyed, ppl. a. unbound, unfettered, 23. 26. Negative un- + past part. of ME. tièn; OE. tiegan, to tie, bind.

Vnwendye, a. unwieldy, clumsy, 27. 34. 120. 16. ME. unwelde, from ME. welden, to wield, rule, manage; cf. MLG. unweld, unwieldy.

Void, a. empty, leisure, unoccupied, 60. 31. OF. voide, voide, empty.

Vpholden, ppl. a. maintained, preserved, 64. 6. Prefix up- holden, pp. of ME. holden; OE. healdan, to keep, hold.

Vplandishe, -yshe, a. belonging to the rural districts, rustic, 15. 10; belonging to the land, up-lying, 49. 32. OE. uplendise, from the uplands, rural.

Vpreter, v. render up, surrender, 18. 34. OE. up, up + ME. rendren; F. rendre, L. reddere, to give back.

Vre, sb. use, practise, 98.20; v. 15. 3. From OF. ure, eure, sb. work, operation. Cf. imure, manure.

Vse themselves, v. behave, bear themselves, 66.3. F. user; L. usäre.

Utopia, island of, 33.9, 38.27, 46.28.

Utopians, 7.17, 43.23, et passim.

Utopus, King, 49.24, 55.30, 125.26, 126.8.

Vtter, v. reveal, disclose, 22.9, 25.1. From ME. utter, adv.; OE. ùtor, uttor, compar. of ùt, out.

Vyle, a. base, menial, 70.10, 79.31. L. vîlis, base, mean.

W

Waiward, a. wayward, perverse, 102.21. ME. aweiward, wayward; OE. on weg, away, + suffix -ward.

Warrauntise, sb. warrant, guarantee, 75.22. OF. warentise, garantise, from warrantir, garantir, to warrant; cf. warrandice = warranty, in Scotch Law.

Wax, v. grow, become, 28.8, 48.15. OE. weaxan.

Way, v. weigh, 140.32. OE. wegan, to bear, weigh; ME. waien, weien. Mod. spelling from contamination with the sb., OE. ge-wiht.

Weale publyque, sb. state, commonwealth, 5.20, 7.22, 9.5, 23, 11.16, 12.34. OE. wea, weal, wealth; L. publicus, belonging to the people. A rendering of L. respublica.

Weldynge, sb. control, movement, 59.24. Pres. part. of ME. welden; OE. geweldan, to control, wield.

Well a worthe, int. of sorrow, alas! 102.13. Apparently a mixture of two phrases; wellaway, OE. wā lá wā, woe, lo, woe, and woe worth the day; worth = OE. weorðan, to become.

Well-sene, pp. a. having seen much, 98.7. Active use of past part. as in well-read, -travelled.

Welthes, sb. riches, possessions, 44.4. Pl. of ME. welde, an extension of wele, OE. wela, prosperity.

Whan, conj. when, 26.20. OE. hwænne; ME. whan, when.

Whether, pron. which of two, whichever, 34.2, 60.10, 101.5. OE. hwæder, pron. and conj.

Whether, adv. whither, 18.12, 74.7, 24, 129.2. OE. hwæder, hwider, whither; ME. whider, with change of d to th before r.

Whiles, whyles, adv. and conj. while, the while that, 22.12, 36.6, 45.12; whyles that, 81.23, 41.5. OE. hwiles, adv. Gen. from huil, sb. time, while. Also as conj. alone or + that.

Whomewyth, with whom, 115.25. The prep. is attached enclitically like the L. cum. Cf. G. vomin.

Wiped beside their gooddes, 111.25; cheated of their goods. Cf. Cooper, Thesaurus, 'I have wipte the fooles from their money.'

Witte, sb. understanding, intelligence, 46.22. OE. witt, understanding; cf. witan, to know.
Wolle, wulle, sb. wool, 59, 30, 64, 36, 75, 6, 80, 28. OE. wull; ME. wolle, wulle.

Wonders, adv. wondrously, 98, 10, 132, 8. Gen. of OE. wundor, sb. wonder, used adverbially.

Wonte, a. wonted, customary, 92, 4. From ME. woned; OE. wunod, past part. of wunian, to be accustomed to. Used as an adj. with change of ð to ð after n.

Wordely, a. worldly, 143, 36. From Wordle, sb. variant of World.

Wordle, sb. world, 22, 30, 82, 1, 6, 83, 1, 94, 29, et passim. A metathesis of World, common in ME.; OE. weorold, worold, world.

Wriede, past part. distorted, perverted, 42, 4. Past part. of ME. wrienen, to twist; OE. wrigan.

Wrythen, ppl. a. perverted, twisted, 36, 17. OE. wriðen, past part. of wrīðan, to twist. Wul, wulle, sb. wool. See Wolle.

Wurse, a. worse, 22, 18. OE. wyrsa, worse; ME. wurse, worse.

Wyckers, sb. twigs, wickers. ME. wiker, a pliant twig.

Wyselyere, adv. more wisely, 47, 10. Compar. of ME. wisli; OE. wislic, a. and adv.

Y

Ye, int. yea, 16, 9. ME. ye; OE. gēa, yea.

Ymages, sb. statues, 105, 13. L. imago (-inem), likeness.

Yocke, sb. yoke, 110, 15. OE. geoc; ME. yok.

Yong ones, young ones, 10, 3. ME. yong, young; OE. geong + ME. ōnes, pl. of ōn; OE. ēn, one.

Z

* Zapoletes, the, 115, 5.